WOMAN WHO IS MAKING FORTUNE IN REAL ESTATE TELLS OF BUSINESS EXPERIENCE

MISS ELLA AUGUSTA SMITH.

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., Sept. 19.—Miss Ella Augusta Smith is a woman who has made good in the business world. Following a "hunch," she stepped from a printing shop into the real estate game, thereby trebling her income, her commissions often amounting to $700 a month.

Real estate has many advantages as a business for women. It calls one out of doors, where most women do not spend enough time. It sharpens her wits, increases her knowledge, and brings her in contact with very alert and intellectual people.

Are there many women in the real estate business? Proportionately few refreshments were served. In two weeks the club will meet again.

ORGANIZE TO SAFEGUARD TRAVEL

National Travelers' Aid Society Will Protect Young Women On Long Journeys.

A new foe has entered the lists to combat the white slave traffic. Unheralded and unsung, but with a systematic deliberation there is being organized in this country the National Travelers' Aid society, which is the outgrowth of the society organized in this city by Miss Grace Dodge, philanthropist and the foremost figure in the Young Women's National Christian association, who always has had the aid of travellers as her special interest.

The present movement had its inception in this city, and its object is to federate all of the existing agencies for the protection of women travellers. Miss Dodge is the principal figure in the national organization, which is non-sectarian and will include the national bodies of the Catholic church, Jewish organizations and the Young Women's National Christian association, representing the Protestant denominations.

Seventeen hundred girls, according to official reports, disappeared in one year en route between New York city and points west. The ugly fact that the white slave traffic is a reality is coupled with the knowledge that travel has become more dangerous for unprotected women and girls.

But the main factor in bringing to an issue the federation is the fact that the Panama canal will open in 1915 and at the same time the Panama exposition in San Francisco will be under way. The women interested in the movement declare they must have their organization complete by that time, as the tide of travel will be extraordinarily great.

It is asserted that the leaders are aware that the vice syndicates are scheming for a harvest in San Francisco and the canal zone, and the new conditions have made it clear that no single organization is capable of coping with the "powers who prey".

The Catholics and Jewish societies, because of their interest in immigrants, have been especially alert in dealing with the question of aid for travellers, and the Young Women's Christian association has made it a department for its activity for years.

These three bodies have decided to get together and negotiations are now pending. It will be necessary, for instance, for them to agree to a national uniform, so that a traveller anywhere in this country, and ultimately, anywhere in the world, will recognize a representative of the Travelers' Aid society. Their uniform will have to be protected by law, for it is charged that the agents of vice even appear at times in the garb of nuns and Salvation Army lassies. It is believed that a national body could obtain ample protective legislation.

As it was defined before the recent convention of the Young Women's Christian association, the travellers' aid "deals with the reasons why persons leave home; protects them through all the vicissitudes and ramifications of travel until they arrive at their destination; and, if strangers, sees that they are housed safely in a home or respectable boarding house, or placed in charge of the organization which is best equipped for their needs."

"Here, in miniature," says a writer connected with the organization, "is the sort of work that is proposed for the whole nation. The New York society is composed of men and women of many religious and philanthropic affiliations. It has been kept free from charges of sectarianism or personal interest. The personnel of the New York society includes representatives from the Young Women's Christian association, the Catholic charity organizations, the Hebrew societies, the King's Daughters, and the railroad and steamship companies, in addition to certain individuals with special qualifications. The success of the New York society has made it natural that it should be the basis for the national organization."
