

GERGACZ WINS CITY TITLE FROM HOOSIER CREAMS

Take Final Game in Championship Series in Fourth Inning With Cluster of Five Runs—Moore Fans Twelve Men.

By playing consistent ball the J. Gergacz team won the city championship from the Hoosier Cream nine, Sunday afternoon at Springbrook park. The final score of the battle stood 6 to 1.

Most of the afternoon's entertainment was played in a steady drizzle, and the soggy ground hampered both teams. It was impossible to keep the ball dry and many wild throws occurred as a result.

One bad inning spelled defeat and the loss of the championship for the Hoosiers. This was the fourth, when four hits, three errors, two stolen bases and a pass totalled five runs for the Gergacz and gave them a big handicap.

Moore Fans Twelve.
Moore duplicated his performance of the first game of the series, and while he allowed more hits was invincible in the pinches. He retired 12 of the Hoosier sluggers by the knockout route. Weber, DeVona, and Bender each fanning the atmosphere three times.

"Cy" Young pitched superb ball for the Hoosiers, for three innings, then he weakened a trifle and before the smoke had cleared away five Gergacz warriors had registered and had put the game on ice. The Gergacz were aided by two errors by Weber and one by Moore.

Touhey led off for the Hoosiers and with Harry Arndt, former Central league, at bat, prospects were rife and Harry connected with one and sent it sizzling through Moore, when Green made a lunge for the ball, speared it bare-handed and pegged Arndt out at first. In the third Young led off, and struck out. Touhey grounded to Vargo and Klaybor slammed a liner to right which Pierce failed to get under. He then stole second, but trying to score on Hudak's single to left was caught at the plate.

The Fatal Fourth.
One, two, three was the method of retiring the Gergacz for the first three innings, but the break came in the aforementioned fourth frame. Green blew off the lid by flying into Bender. Wells walked and trotted to third when Connors pushed a double to left. Pierce shoved a bunt at Weber, who threw wide in an attempt to get Wells at home. Connors landing on third. Pierce proceeded to swipe the keystone. Weber again blew a roller sent at him by Vargo and Connors registered. Spair caught Wells and Klaybor struck Klaybor juggled a grounder, Pierce and Vargo counting during the excitement. Gruber celebrated the day by poking a two-sacker to left, registering Wells and "Johnnie" attempted to stretch his hit into a three-bagger and was caught at third.

A single by Welchence and a sacrifice by Young, after one down in the Hoosier fifth put a man on second, but the next batter struck at three wide ones and the chance to score was lost. Vargo singled in the Gergacz sixth but was pegged out by Hudak on an attempted steal.

Moore fanned three Hoosiers in the seventh, while Ring, sent down two batters by the same method. Welchence opened the eighth by popping to Green. Ring shot a single past Wells and hurriedly to second when Gruber let one of Moore's slants get by him. Touhey struck out, but Klaybor got his second bingle of the afternoon and scored Ring. This was the lone counter annexed by the Hoosiers.

Add One in Eighth.
By way of clinching the argument the Gergacz proceeded to add one additional marker in their half of the eighth. Green hit to deep left for two sacks and was safe at third when Houhey dropped a throw to catch him. Wells fanned and Connors burglarized second and when Weber dropped Hudak's throw, Green ambled home with the final count. Pierce fanned to end the inning. Arndt singled to left in the ninth with none gone, and took possession of the second sack when Gruber, fanned by another Hoosier. Chances were good for a counter, but Moore pulled himself out by making Weber, DeVona and Bender breeze.

THIS ALL COMES UNDER THE HEAD OF PLEASURE.—By Goldberg.

Don't Roast Our Clubs And Fighters; There Are Worse

BY R. L. GOLDBERG.
ROME, Italy.—As the panorama shoots past and you reach out frantically to clutch a bit of atmosphere here and an experience there to take home to share with your friends, you feel the utter hopelessness of it all. You long to wrap the whole of Europe in a small package and carry it away to your bungalow in Flatbush, there to remove the string and absorb the contents in the sweet silence of undisturbed, undismayed and undisturbed Brooklyn.

How I wished you could have been with me fifteen minutes ago when I looked Apollo Belvedere in the eye and said "good morning" to the busts of Augustus, Caesar, Cleo and Calligula, and asked Minerva if she was not tired of standing on her feet for thousands of years. I don't know why I wish you had been with me or what you would have done if you were. But I wish you had been with me.

As I emerged from the beautiful edifice, where the art treasures of Rome are stored, I spied an American tourist kicking an Italian taxicab driver in the shins. He had been charged a lire too much. Instantly a scene came back to me, through its strong contrast to the unconventional way in which my countryman was handling the Roman chariot.

It was a night at the National Sporting Club of London. John and I had been invited by the editor of a great London daily. The editor did not accompany us so we felt at liberty to dislike the show as much as it pleased.

We are now seated in the middle of a crowd of men whose outward appearance betrays no signs of vegetable, mineral or human life. They are nervously stroking the long mustaches, adjusting their monocles and glancing at the platinum watches on their wrists. Occasionally one of them takes out a purple handkerchief from his left cuff and taps his nose very gently with it three times. Their ingersoll shirt fronts are starched to the limit of stiffness.

About twenty feet from the ring is seated the only man in the house who keeps his hat on. Maybe he is afraid if he takes it off the owner will like it back. He sits on a high chair like the cashier behind a bar. He is the referee.

Gallery Called the Steerage.
Beside him sits a very bald gentleman to whom laughing must have become a lost art forty years ago. He is diligently writing at a steady pace in front of which is a fire bell. He is the time keeper. He could not have taken his job more seriously if he had been timing all the workmen on the Panama canal. We cannot find out what he is writing. He may be making his will. He can't last long with a grouch like that.
