MARRIED LIFE THE SECOND YEAR

By MABEL HERBERT URNER.

It was Monday morning and Helen was making a list for the laundry.

Here Anna came to the door with a letter in her hand. "Oh, ma'am, what do you think! I just got a letter from—"

"Don't bother me now—I'm counting the clothes. How many towels did I say?"

"Well, what is it?" impatiently, without being conscious of Anna, still standing in the door.

"Jim?" Helen repeated vaguely, her mind still on the laundry list. "Who's Jim?"

"Why, my brother, ma'am," reproachfully. "Don't you remember—his wife died last spring?"

"Oh, yes." "He has three little ones, you know, and there's nobody to look after them and he wants me to come."

"But Anna—You're not going?" "I'm sorry, ma'am, but I guess I'll have to."

"But what will I do. You can't leave me alone." "Anna's kindly suggestion."

"You could get Mrs. Fitzgerald," Anna suggested. (Mrs. Fitzgerald was the woman who came to clean windows and woodwork.)

"For how long? How long will you be gone?"

for him to be at his office, and she had no idea from where he was phoning.

As though dazed by the sudden disappointment she still stood by the telephone. Through the open dining door she caught a glimpse of the table she had so carefully prepared—the dainty china, the silver, the flowers, the pink shaded candles.

For a moment she looked at it all with admiring eyes. Then she leaned her head against the wall by the telephone and burst into tears.
