The skirt is draped in a movement crossed on the left side and shows at back a long panel which is finished by a narrow rounded train.

MUST HAVE FAITH, WORKS ALONE WILL NOT SUFFICE

Faith is necessary to please the Almighty, said Rev. A. G. Schafer Sunday at the Lowell Heights M. E. church, in his sermon on "Faith and Its Advancement." "Without faith, it is impossible to please God," he said. "We may do much good and accomplish mighty things, but these alone will not suffice. Men who have accomplished great things for God were not great in the sight of men, but had faith in God."

How I Earned My First Dollar

NO. 1—SAMUEL APPLIGATE. "Don't remember the first dollar I earned," answered Samuel Appligate, the pioneer druggist, as he leaned sociably over the cigar counter, "but I earned by first five cents—we didn't have nickels then—down in Philadelphia. "I was a little shaver then and there was a city ordinance that all walks had to be cleaned of snow before noon. Whenever there was a snow fall a couple of us boys would go from door to door soliciting jobs of cleaning the walks at five cents each. Of course five cents doesn't seem like much, but then it looked as big as a quarter does now. Why, as I remember, a penny seemed more money than a nickel does now; in fact, I think it had greater purchasing power." "With the present cost of living in mind, I agreed that probably he was right. "Sometimes we would make as much as half a dollar in a morning, but usually we averaged only a quarter. In our house to house canvass we came upon a lot of residents who didn't want to spend a nickel to have their walks cleaned; they'd rather do it themselves to save the money. That's hard to believe in these days, isn't it?" "But wasn't it rather slow work, cleaning off a whole walk at that price?" I inquired. "Yes, took quite a little time—but when we came to a place where the snow was packed down, we used to skip over it," he chuckled. "When I came to South Bend in '57, work was awfully scarce, it was hard to get a job at anything—and of course we were glad to get whatever offered. The price they paid boys then—I was 17—was 50 cents a day, and it was back-breaking work for ten hours a day as a rule. I helped masons, carpenters, and more than one I helped to dig cellars. "That was in the spring—later in the summer I got a job in William Smith's planing mill—still at the same wages—50 cents a day. I worked all through that hot summer down there on the race, and I tell you I don't believe I ever experienced such hot weather in all my life." "Then Mr. Appligate went on to tell how he started in the drug business; he began to work in the Cushing drug store in '58, and remained there until 1897, when he bought Mr. Cushing out. Mr. Appligate, therefore, has been in the drug business here for 55 years, 56 years next April.

SELECTING "HIS" CHRISTMAS GIFT

Shops Offer Variety of Gifts to Suit the Taste of Any Man, But His Taste Must Be Discovered First.

Three illuminating suggestions occur to the woman who has a man's Christmas gift to buy; desk belongings, shaving belongings, smoking belongings. On these three notes any number of changes are rung by the ready merchant, and unless the man in question is hopelessly well supplied in all the above particulars, the selection of a proper and acceptable gift is only a matter of time.

Man's Christmas gift has ever been a problem to women, for even with the wealth suggestions in the shops, one is never certain that he will like—and use—the carefully selected offering. Man has such a way of leaving an ornately decorated tie-rack to pine, unused, upon the wall beside his dresser while his four-in-hand is tossed as of yore over the familiarly convenient gas jet. Unless the bestower of an expensive, silver-mounted pen-knife is cherished in his heart of hearts with sentiment, how apt that knife is to remain, in its chamois jacket, in his left vest pocket while the ancient and honorable broken-bladed one which has sharpened pencils, picked out slivers and whittled kindling on camping trips, retains its place conveniently in the accustomed right-hand pocket!

Wise Woman's Scheme. The wise woman, looking for man's Christmas gift, selects something so entirely comfortable or strikingly useful and convenient that he simply cannot do without it after the first day—and marvels how he ever did. But to find this gift in the bewildering array of before-Christmas offerings—there's the problem, indeed.

For some reason or other elephants are very fashionable this season—gifts of elephant hide or elephant tusk have the virtue of expensiveness and distinction, and these gifts cover almost the whole range of masculine needs. There are tiny paperweights in the form of natural little elephants, covered with elephant hide and having real elephant ivory tusks. They stand on slabs of ivory, clipped across a large tusk. There are also huge traveling bags of elephant hide, mounted with gold, monogrammed—if one wishes—with gold and supplied with the usual number of luxurious fittings all mounted with gold and elephant hide. Between these two extremes there are various other useful gifts; whisk broom holders, photograph and calendar frames, desk fittings, and the like, any one of which would be sure to please a man of good taste.

The man who does not own a steamer rug will appreciate one of these convenient rugs which may be folded and flung across a couch, making an attractive addition to the room as well as adding to comfort.

If one is surer of a man's taste in pictures, a handsomely framed water color or engraving makes an acceptable gift. English hunting scenes and the like, and engravings are usually appreciated by men. Unless one is very sure of the man's taste, it is better not to venture on books. Most folks—women as well as men—have actual or mental lists of books they would like to have, if they could afford it, and sometimes a tactfully pre-arranged talk with a man on the subject of books will reveal the names of one or two of these desired but as yet unattained tomes.

Slippers, the old standby when a man's Christmas gift was under consideration, are not given as much as they used to be. Men are apt to be quite as finicky about their personal

The Ellsworth Store THE BRIGHTEST SPOT IN TOWN. (Not Open Evenings at Present) belongings now as women are and like to select their wearables themselves. But where is the masculine heart that will not be warmed by half a dozen pairs of handsome silk socks—not the thin, sleazy "silk socks" of the bargain counter, but real silk socks, well woven of substantial silk threads and in rich, agreeable colors? Very handsome socks in the best shades of navy, golden brown, dark green and wine, may be had for a dollar the pair; clocked silk stocks cost about a dollar fifty. Gloves, by the same token, are a safer choice than neckties, for though many a man with the afore-mentioned tender sentiments for a woman has heroically worn a tie at whose hue or pattern his soul rebelled every time he knotted it, the average man would far rather receive a pair of good looking gloves; and a pair of tan or gray stitched gloves of some reliable make will certainly be acceptable.
