How English Beauties Keep Faces Youthful

Christian Miller, F. C. I., noted English health expert, attributes the early aging of American women mainly to the "national nervousness." The women of England, he says, can teach us the inestimable lesson of a more wholesome method of keeping the face girlish-looking and healthy. Ordinary mercurized wax, used like cold cream, rejuvenates the worst complexion. Women here may easily acquire the habit, this wax being obtainable at drug stores generally in the United States and Canada. It is applied at night and washed off in the morning. One ounce is sufficient to completely renovate a bad complexion. It has a peculiar action in keeping the face free from the particles of dead and dehydrated skin which are constantly appearing.

Having reveled over-long in the tints of the rainbow decked-herself in the shades of the vegetable garden and the orchard, Fashion seems to have wearied of gaudy color and from cloud-gray and tomato red and peach-yellow she is turning for relief to black and white. You see it everywhere—at the races, at the theaters, in the church promenade on Sunday morning—costumes of shimmering white taffeta and somber velvet, black lace wraps glorified with white ribbon, white voile blouses worn with skirts of soft black liberty silk.

with needlework and a dainty three course luncheon was served by the hostess. July 24, Mrs. Ray Gooley, 822 S. Rush st., will entertain the circle.

On a woman who can wear it with distinction there is nothing so smart as black and white, and nothing can be more sensational than chalk white silk or satin combined with material the hue of the raven's wing. For instance, a cape of filmy black lace threaded with broad bands of liberty satin ribbon seen at the races recently made costumes of royal blue and pompadour taffeta look almost demure and "sensible". The chapeau of white straw trimmed with a towering black aigrette gave the costume a decidedly military effect. One of the new evening gowns

Lay a ruler flat against your hand. Press ever so hard and it will not be uncomfortable. Twist it a little so that one edge or corner rests against your hand and even a slight pressure will cause it to hurt. It is the same with a pair of spectacles that rest upon the nose. If the broad flat surface of the bridge is exactly the same angle as the bridge of your nose then it will rest easily and comfortably. On the other hand if it is twisted so that the upper edge or lower edge cuts into the flesh the top of the nose becomes sore and irritated and the glasses are painful. That is why I always measure the angle at which the nose stands from the face when making spectacles for you. With the average crest of the nose stands at an angle of about forty-five degrees. In some, however, it stands nearer perpendicular and the bridge of the spectacle must be made to stand in the same position. It is these little things that make the difference between perfectly fitting glasses and the other kind.
