AT THE ORPHEUM.
Ed Morton walked away with the honors of the new bill at the Orpheum opening Thursday with four new songs that were wittily written and humorously sung. One in reference to Pauline of the movies, and another giving a comical twist to some of Shakespeare's plays were capital examples of what a comedy song can be. In theatrical parlance the "topped show" and the audience could not get enough of his humorous harmony.

The Burton Holmes' pictures of "War-time Europe" are timely and interesting giving intimate glimpses of the nobility of the warring nations. H. Andre Langdon, gives the accompanying talk concisely and clearly. The time allotted is taken up with Russian and German scenes and personages. The other countries are omitted probably because of the lack of time.

The Barretts open the show with novelty hat juggling that is well done. A comedy sketch, "Who's Little Girl Are You?" amusing the people is the ancient idea of "Charlie's Aunt" condensed for vaudeville purposes. A tango dance and a burlesque of the same are the redeeming features. The less said about the act of Handers and Millis the better.

SURPRISE THEATER.
"Our Mutual Girl" No. 26 will be the attraction at the Surprise theater today. In this chapter Dunbar worms his way further into the confidence of Margaret. And Our Mutual Girl poses for Penrhyn Stanlaw. Upon the urgent invitation of Mrs. Knickerbocker and Margaret, Dunbar arrives at the Knickerbocker home and accompanies aunt and niece to the Waldorf-Astoria Roof garden where they have dinner far above the humming motors of Fifth av. Upon their return to Mrs. Knickerbocker's house they find Ada and Kid Joseph awaiting them.

Kid Joseph notices Margaret's increasing interest in Dunbar and Mrs. Knickerbocker's apparent approval of the intimate friendship between the two. Kid is not much pleased with the turn in affairs and visits Madge Travers to tell her he has information which will prove that Margaret's professed friend, Dunbar, is a crook. Visiting Mrs. Knickerbocker soon after her talk with Kid Joseph, Madge tells Margaret's aunt what she has learned. When he learns that Madge Travers has failed to convince Mrs. Knickerbocker of Dunbar's duplicity, Kid Joseph personally visits Dunbar and warns him to cease visiting Margaret. Dunbar sneers at the young gangster's threats.

"The Bank Burglar's Fate". This is a two-reel Reliance offering, was written by C. D. Browne of Minnesota Bankers' Protective association, and shows what a bank burglar can reasonably expect as a result of his crime. It seems as entertaining as any picture could be. It is full of snap, go and dramatic suspense. It shows the detectives' side of the matter and shows how their co-ordinated information about the underworld and its doings makes it an easy thing to gather in the criminals.

THE AUDITORIUM.
For a thrilling, nerve-scrapping, tingling photoplay, the Broadway star feature screen story, "Shadows of the Past" is unprecedented in the annals of film photography. It is an original melodrama by Marguerite Bertsch, a Vitagraph three-reel masterpiece, produced with the perfection characteristic of all Vitagraph pictures and acted by a cast of super-excellent players, including such world-famous motion picture stars as Harry Morey, L. Rogers Lytton, Anita Stewart, Rose Tapley and Julia Swayne Gordon.

The story shows the struggle of three former convicts who are trying to reform. A crooked politician who knows their secret forces them into helping him in a plot against a political enemy. The enemy proves to be the man the girl convict is in love with. The leader imprisons her, but she manages by pretending to faint, to catch him off guard and so to escape. A lively automobile chase follows and brings the thrill of the big drama when a machine is crushed by a rushing train before one's eyes. That kills the politician and those who have been his prey are free.

Anita Stewart gives sincerity and charm to the role of the girl convict and L. Rogers Lytton, in the type as the scheming politician. Julia Swayne Gordon cleverly portrays the part of the politician's accomplice and Rose Tapley excels in the character of the convict's wife.

This thrilling film release, direct from its run at the Vitagraph theater, New York City, will be the feature attraction at the Auditorium today. "David Garrick" a two reel Vitagraph with Clara Kimball Young and Flora Finch will also be seen.

SEPTEMBER MORN.
That jolly musical comedy "September Morn" that pleased South Bend theater goers last spring, will be seen at the Oliver again starting tonight and with a matinee and night performance on Saturday. In the company are Nat Phillips, Hazel Shannon, Adelyn Estee, Wm. Cameron, J-hn Patton, Fred DuBois besides a good looking chorus capable of singing and dancing the latest dances including the tango, hesitation waltz and shark swish dip. The piece is filled with catchy music of the whistling kind and there is sufficient plot to the piece to sustain the interest throughout. Reasonable prices have been arranged.

AT THE MAJESTIC.
By popular request the Musical Donnelly's have been retained on the bill at the Majestic. They will conclude the week with new and novel musical selections. Ida Burns, a diminutive and talented singer, is presenting comedy songs and novelty dances in a manner to win her many friends. Harry and Mae Mathews do novelty globe rolling cleverly.

The Majestic picture program today includes: "Mollie the Drummer Boy," a stirring war picture; "The Walke Sisters," a laughable Latin comedy, and "The Opal's Curse," an intense drama of far off India.

AT THE COLONIAL.
"The False Shadow," a sensational two-reel Lubin subject, will interest the patrons of the Colonial today. A Vitagraph comedy, "Second Sight," will also be shown.

LIGNONIER.—This city has a Kathryn Williams, but she is not a movie star. She ran third in a carnival queen contest.

SURPRISE THEATER

The Home of Good Pictures. TODAY OUR MUTUAL GIRL No. 26. THE BANK BURGLAR'S FATE.

This two-part offering was written by C. D. Browne of the Minnesota Bankers' Protective association, and shows what a bank burglar can reasonably expect as a result of his crime. It seems about as entertaining as any picture could well be; is one of the best offerings within a month. Full of snap, go and dramatic suspense, it holds the spectator to the very end; there is not a bit of padding nor a spot in it that is not absorbingly interesting. It shows how the yeags plan and carry out their scheme to rob the bank's safe and get away with the coin. Then it switches to the detectives' side of the matter and shows how their co-ordinated information about the under-world and its doings makes it an easy thing to gather in the criminals. Its author had a dandy story to tell and its producer had the skill to make that story tell powerfully on the screen. Acting, staging, photography, everything about the picture is of the best.
