* SUGARLESS RECIPES * TAKE CRIMP OUT OF THE SUGAR FAMINE *

BY CAROLINE COE

Here are the rules for "sugarless preserves." Follow them carefully and you won't need to worry about the "sugar famine."

Boil the fruit in water without sugar. Scald the jars, put the fruit in while they are still piping hot. Use fresh, firm fruit. Over-ripe fruit is likely to spoil.

Keep the jars airtight. Add sugar when the preserves are served at the table.

European sugar has spoiled the price of sugar in America, but it hasn't spoiled the plans of the American housewife for her fall pickling and preserving.

The American housewife had the will, and now she's found the way, to offset the effect of "sugar famine". She's going to do her preserving by a sugarless method.

And it can be done. As every experienced housekeeper knows, it's heat that counts when fruits or vegetables are to be preserved. Heat's the thing, not sugar.

Canned fruit is nothing more or less than sterilized fruit; if fruit is perfectly sterilized it may be preserved or canned without sugar, and the sugarless preserves retain every bit of the flavor of the natural fruit.

The sugarless way of putting up fruit is like any other way, except that you leave out the sugar. But special attention must be given to scalding the jars and they must be "red hot" when the fruit is poured into them.

Plums, apples, peaches, pears, pineapple—in fact, any of the fruits usually put away for winter—may be preserved without sugar. The housekeeper may use her own recipes. The only difference is she puts in no sugar.

BEAUTIFUL TABLE CLOTHS OF COTTON AND LOOK LIKE LINEN.

Mrs. Housewife, why don't you stock up your linen and bed closets this fall with cotton?

The Sherman house and the Fort Dearborn, two of the largest hotels in Chicago, use cotton table cloths, napkins and towels exclusively and you cannot tell them from linen. The pattern, the gloss and "the feel" of linen is there.

Buy cotton this fall if your table cloths and napkins need replenishing.

The most beautiful blankets you ever saw of pink, blue and white, in stripes and plaids are made entirely of cotton. They are light, warm and they will not shrink in the laundering.

Ask to see these, when you do your shopping. These cotton blankets, table cloths and napkins are "Made in America."

SAVE YOUR RUMMAGE!

The Orphans' home will hold its annual rummage sale soon. Save all your rummage to help buy the winter's coal for the orphans! Advt.

National Cotton Week

Everybody Buy Cotton Cotton Goods Week Starts Thursday, Oct. 8.

The patriotic leaders at Washington have started a nation-wide movement of cotton selling to help out the South, which has an overload of cotton on hand. Society women and merchants throughout this broad land have taken the matter up and are making progress.

Mrs. Pennybacker, president of the Federation of Women's Clubs, has made an urgent appeal. It's now up to merchants and their customers to get into the game and help. You can help by buying United States made cotton goods which you need; we help by selling these goods at low prices.

You'll find our United States made goods priced as low as any store can afford to sell them.

Throughout the Ellsworth Store tomorrow, Special Displays of United States made cotton goods will be marked by United States.

We make it worth your while to buy liberally and we are sure that if the stores and women of the United States do their duty, United States cotton mills will soon need all the cotton that war-ridden Europe cannot buy.

Mrs. Pennybacker said: "Let the men buy bales of cotton. Let the women buy cotton goods?"
