Father Fails In His Responsibility

Men Should be Made More Conscious of Home and Their Relation to It.

Study of home relationships, as an essential part of education, is the only cure for the divorce evil, according to Dr. B. R. Andrews, in a bulletin on "Education for the Home," issued by the United States bureau of education.

In the making and the conduct of a home, man's responsibility is equal to woman's, according to Dr. Andrews. "As we have lately been emphasizing woman's responsibility for municipal and civic matters," he says, "so we may urge that men become more conscious of the home and their relation to it."

It takes two to start a home and the child has a father as well as a mother.

"The basis of appreciation of the home is laid in the kindergarten. Household arts will henceforth be taught in the elementary schools, in a general way, while practical training in domestic science will be given to girls whose education is to end with the elementary school."

Practically all the state normal schools have organized household arts departments, according to Dr. Andrews. Of the colleges and universities, the bureau of education is to issue a number of government agencies, including the home education division of the bureau of education, the children's bureau, the public health service, and the department of agriculture, are all, according to this bulletin, engaged in reinforcing the home and the school in social betterment.

"The child is a school-minded," says Dr. Andrews. "For this reason the child can be reached through the school. The school can help the home by reinforcing the natural interest of the child in the home, by imparting knowledge necessary for sharing in home activities, and by affording some practice in them."

Among the plans for connecting the home and the school, that of giving "credit" at school for household work done at home is becoming widespread. The application of this idea is seen in what is known as the "Crete plan."

It has been in successful operation for 40 years in Crete, Neb., and has been adopted in 50 or more high schools in that state and in neighboring ones. This plan secures the cooperation of women able and willing to teach cooking of some given article. As many as 20 articles included in the course. Girls thereby see the interior of many good homes and gain impressions of good housekeeping.

Girls become interested in cooking, and the result is that they are often found in the kitchen when their mothers entertain in the parlor. The plan has been said to be "the most democratic form of cooperation and the best method of philanthropy yet discovered."
