LITTLE GIRL GETS HALF OF ESTATE

Jeanette Wyant to Receive $15,000—Not Mentioned in Father's Will.

From poverty to riches is the career of little Jeanette Wyant, who lives with her mother two miles north of the city on the Niles road.

The increase in her fortunes was not an act of charity, a special dispensation from heaven or the beneficence of a kindly soul. It came to her justly as an inheritance from her father, James E. Wyant, who, when he drew up the terms of his will, completely forgot his little daughter.

The old story of domestic troubles was originally responsible for Jeanette's decline in fortune. Her mother and father were incompatible and she in turn was forced to bear the burden.

Her father was a well-to-do real estate man in Niles. There she had known comforts and even a few luxuries.

Then the separation between her parents occurred with the subsequent divorce, and Jeanette and her mother began to shift for themselves. They came to this city.

Last year their plight was so great that the South Bend Associated Charities were called upon to assist them.

Then three months ago Jeanette's father died. Hope brightened in the hearts of Jeanette and her mother. The father might have willed them enough to take care of them for a while. But the silver lining in the cloud faded. The will was probated, and the instrument which was drawn up three months prior to the father's death, and after the separation in the family, made no mention of either Jeanette or her mother.

Recourse was had to the law courts. Chester L. DuComb was appointed guardian of Jeanette. Then the law firm of DuComb and DuComb, assisted by an attorney from Niles, began a legal process to break the will.

Jeanette's grandmother did not want to appear in court. She offered the girl's guardian $500 as a settlement. This was refused. The amount was increased to $5,000. Again it was refused. Later the grandmother consented to sign half of the personal and real property to Jeanette. This the guardian accepted. The time came around and the papers were taken to Mrs. Wyant for her signature. She refused. It was to be $5,000 as a settlement or nothing, she said.

But as the date for the will contest approached, and the grandmother realizing that it would be necessary for her to appear as a witness in the litigation, again consented to the full settlement. Monday the matter was concluded and the case was dismissed today in the Berrien county courts.

WANTS TO START RIGHT SAYS GIRL

Runaway Caught Here Tells Sordid Story—Escapes From Illinois Home.

She wouldn't talk for 24 hours, but when she did—Fredica Hopwood of Illinois, mostly of Geneva, according to the story she told Mrs. Minnie Evans and Chief Kerr of the South Bend police department, unburdened herself of a startling life history in the chief's offices at the city hall.

How much of it is true, or how little, Chief Kerr expects to learn within the next few days, anticipating an answer to his query for information from officers of the Illinois girls' institution at Geneva.

"Her story," said Mrs. Evans, "is most pitiful." The police woman endeavored to narrate the events in this 18-year-old life as they had been told her in the absence of Chief Kerr, who left the room that the more intimate side might be freely gone into.

Motherless at the age of one year, Fredica said she lived with her father at Blue Island, Ill. There was a sister a few years older and a housekeeper. At 14 she strayed from the pathways of home for the freer life of the streets, and at 15, at the Home of Good Sheppard, to which she was sent as a ward of the juvenile court, she became a mother.

"Was it the fault of your father?" Was such a life exemplified to you in your home?" queried Mrs. Evans. "O, no, father was a good man and our housekeeper was a good woman. Their example was the best," she said. Discharged from the Home of the Good Sheppard, with her infant babe, she went forth into the world. The baby died and after a few months Fredica was sent to the institution at Geneva.

In her 20 months' incarceration she said she had run away innumerable times and told instructions against the matron of the cottage in which she lived with a number of other girls.

Last Saturday she ran away again, intent upon joining her sister at Indianapolis, and at 15, at the juvenile court and a probationer. A Chicago woman, she said, gave her a ticket to South Bend. On the train she asked a Mrs. Miller living near South Bend if she could get to Indianapolis for 35 cents. Mrs. Miller took her to the Y. W. C. A. and Mrs. Evans was called.

Fredica wants to get away from the institution, wants to go to new haunts, and she said: "If I can get out and away, I'm going to try to be good."

MRS. MILLER TOLD WIFE OF QUILHOT

Attorney Says Vice Investigator Made a Specialty of Marrying Widows.

Armed with power of attorney and pursuant to instructions from his client, Russell W. Geyer, attorney for Mrs. Mary Miller Quilhot, is today telling up what funds her husband, John H. Quilhot, has on deposit in Michigan banks. Geyer made a statement in Battle Creek Tuesday in which he charged Quilhot with having made a specialty of rich widows and that the former Mrs. Marian B. Miller was his seventh and latest victim.

Funds that Quilhot now has deposited in Michigan banks are located in Battle Creek, from which Mrs. Miller, Red Cross treasurer, was away from home, Lansing, the scene of former operations and in Grand Rapids. Geyer has filed civil action tying up these funds in all the cities, and has been so busy preparing the suits in Michigan before Quilhot could withdraw his funds that he has had no time to prepare the charges in the local courts.

Atty. Geyer is now enroute to South Bend on a very short session of the board Tuesday. Quilhot's bank accounts being most extensive. This was admitted Tuesday by Lenn J. Oare, his law partner. Details of the pending divorce suit by Mrs. Mary Miller, Mrs. Miller after a marriage of a little over a year were not given out by Oare.

Sensational Nature. It is understood, however, that the suit will be of a sensational nature and will be filed in the circuit court Wednesday along with another civil suit. This last step will be an attempt to recover property out of which Mrs. Quilhot charges she was swindled by her husband.

The most startling news in Tuesday's developments in the Quilhot case was the statement made by Atty. Geyer that the former Mrs. Mary Miller was the alleged swindler's seventh wife.

The exact amount of property out of which Mrs. Quilhot is alleged to have been swindled, could not be learned today. Developments now pending, declared Atty. Oare Tuesday, would determine whether or not Quilhot had been successful in the last of his operations to dispose of his wife's property.

No new developments locally in the criminal proceedings against Quilhot have been recorded. That the prosecutor is now investigating the charges against the man is admitted from that the next few days, anticipating an answer to his query for information from officers of the Illinois girls' institution at Geneva.

"Her story," said Mrs. Evans, "is most pitiful." The police woman endeavored to narrate the events in this 18-year-old life as they had been told her in the absence of Chief Kerr, who left the room that the more intimate side might be freely gone into.

paring a car of donations to Chicago's poor. "One man has already offered a load of cabbages," said the mayor, "and with this garden product selling at but $1.50 a ton, it is easily probable that others with a surplus of cabbages will be glad to donate them to the Associated Charities during Good Will week."

Arrangements have been made for the receiving of all surplus garden produce which the farming community desire to market. B. V. Miller, in charge at the market, will receive the donations and will store them at the market until called for by the Associated Charities.

Communications addressed either to Mr. Miller or the mayor regarding produce the farmers have and can not get to town will be taken care of by the city and means derived for their transport.

"Apples, potatoes, cabbages or anything else of the kind will be appreciated," said the mayor Tuesday, "and will be a great help to the charities in charge of Good Will week."

Growers and Dealers May Draw Lessons From Europe.

CHICAGO, Nov. 16.—A membership of more than 1,000,000 will be represented by delegates from nearly every state when the third national conference on marketing and farm credits begins its sessions here on Nov. 29. The conference will be in session for four days.

The conference is an organization formed to launch a movement to bring the agricultural interests of the country into closer business relationship. Its first principle is to prevent waste in the form of unmarketed products because of inadequate banking accommodations and waste due to faulty packing and transportation. Speakers will point out the things that warring nations of Europe have done to make the food supply meet the demands without calling upon the rest of the world for necessities.

MCCORMICK WILL MEET ROOSEVELT

Conference at Oyster Bay Expected to Center Around Presidency.

CHICAGO, Nov. 16.—Additional and disturbing evidence that Theodore Roosevelt's soubriquet soon will come hurrying into the presidential ring was afforded to Illinois republican leaders Monday when they learned that McCall McCormick had been called to Oyster Bay. The man who furnished munitions for the colonel's fight in 1912 left for the east at noon. He said he did not expect to return before Saturday, indicating that the conference was to be one of importance.

"I am going to Oyster Bay in response to Col. Roosevelt's invitation," said Mr. McCormick. "I expect to discuss with him the general situation regarding the presidency and the possibility of a reactionary being nominated by the republican party. I am not prepared to talk about the chance of a national progressive ticket being put in the field, but that is not within the bounds of reason."

"When the progressive state central committee met in Chicago last week it adopted a resolution unanimously to the effect that the party would support no man who might be classed as a reactionary. The return of the progressive to the G. O. P. in Massachusetts and the consequent election of McCall as governor was hailed by many observers as a sign that the bull moose movement was dead. It is not. The spirit that revolted against the steam roller in 1912 is still alive. If its voice is not recognized within the republican party a manifestation of its strength may occur elsewhere."

Time Not Fitting For Personal Explanation, He Says.

LONDON, Nov. 16.—Baron Fisher of Killybegs, former first sea lord of the admiralty, upon whose shoulders considerable blame for British failure in the war was put by Winston Churchill yesterday, answered the former first lord of the admiralty today.

"I leave a record of 61 years of service in behalf of my country," declared the former first sea lord. "I am content to wait. I think it is not fitting to make a personal explanation affecting the national interests at a time like this when the country is in the midst of a great war."

DEFENSE LOSES POINT

Government Can Present Evidence Rules Court.

NEW YORK, Nov. 16.—The defense in the New Haven conspiracy trial apparently lost a vital point when Judge Hunt ruled that the government could go ahead in its proof that the 65 trolley lines acquired by the New Haven were taken over for the purpose of interstate commerce.

It was the contention of the defense that the indictment specified that the trolley lines were engaged in interstate traffic before their acquisition. Attorney General Cummings argued for an hour. Judge Hunt overruled the objection.

Charles S. Mellen then resumed the stand and announced that he wanted to correct his testimony of yesterday.
