SOCIETY

A wedding of unusual local interest took place last evening at Harvey, Ill. when Miss Alice Jane Wilson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles W. Wilson of Harvey, became the bride of Harold Warner of Chicago, son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles L. Warner, 211 E. Franklin St., South Bend.

The ceremony was performed at 8 o'clock at the First Methodist Episcopal church by Bishop Thomas Nicholson, resident bishop of the Chicago area of the Methodist church, assisted by the bride's father, Rev. Charles W. Wilson. The simple but effective decoration of the church consisted only of greenery, relieved by the lights of the burning tapers. Miss Marlon Murphy of Woodstock, Ill., presided at the organ and announced the entrance of the bride with "The Bridal Chorus" from Lohengrin, and during the reading of the service she played "At Dawning" and "Because." For the recessional Miss Murphy played the Mendelssohn march.

Leading the bridal procession were the usher, Arthur Eastman of South Bend, Sidney May of Evanston, Ill., Clarence Flack of Chicago and Charles R. Wilson of Harvey. Miss Mary Warner of South Bend, was the next to enter, wearing a gown of coral color tulle and carrying an arm bouquet of blue delphinium. She was followed by Miss Winifred Wilson, sister of the bride, who wore a gown similar to the one worn by Miss Warner and whose bouquet was also of the blue delphinium. The maid of honor, Miss Phoebe Wilson, elder sister of the bride, followed, wearing a gown of silver blue tulle and carrying an arm bouquet of butterfly roses and blue delphinium. Miss Barbara Crane, small daughter of Prof. and Mrs. Ronald S. Crane of Evanston, Ill., in a frock of pale blue georgette, serving as flower girl, immediately preceded the bride who walked with her father. The bride was lovely in her gown of white chiffon tulle with an overdrapery of Spanish lace. Her shower bouquet was of Killarney roses and valley lilies. The groom accompanied by his groomsmen, Lloyd Herold, formerly of South Bend, entered from the society and met the bride at the altar.

Following the ceremony a reception for 80 guests was held at the home of the bride's parents. The bridal table was artistically decorated in gold and white in honor of the 10th wedding anniversary of the bride's grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. George F. Smith, of Lake Geneva, Wis.

Among the guests were Mr. and Mrs. C. L. Warner, Mr. and Mrs. William C. Warner, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Eastman, Mr. and Mrs. Frank A. Stover, and Miss Mary Warner of South Bend; Mr. and Mrs. Herbert D. During the business session Mrs. Floyd Jones, Mrs. Anna McGaughey, Mrs. A. Collier and Mrs. E. Hisey were appointed on the calling committee. Light refreshments were served to 15 guests during the social hour. The next meeting of the auxiliary will be announced later.

What to Wear in Hot Weather

In those not distant days when the mercury is going to slide suavely up over 90 degrees, leaving you gasping for breath and wondering why you ever thought you liked summer—then the problem of what to wear will confront you.

Calico is one of the old-fashioned materials recently come back to favor, which you may choose for hot weather dresses.

Quaint patterns in colors or black or backgrounds of gray of black or blue remind one of grandmother's frocks of 50 years ago.

Figured batiste—white sprinkled with rosebuds of pale pink or blue—is also shown.

Organza is worn, but it is not so popular as figured stuffs. Checks and stripes are especially featured; dots come next.

Gingham and dotted Swiss are very good and are shown in all colors.

Advice to Girls

By ANNIE LAURIE

DEAR ANNIE LAURIE: I'm a girl 21 years of age. I've been hunting for a young man about the same age, but I have not yet succeeded. I'm very good-looking.

My girl friends tell me I do not know how to get them. Please give me your advice. I'm very anxious to get married. MABEL S.

MABEL S.: There is nothing to do, my dear, but to wait until the right man comes along. You will meet him before you know it. It may be so sudden that you will be surprised. Just be sweet and act naturally when you meet any young man.

There is no way "to get a young man." Your friends are wrong. A man loves a girl for herself and not for anything she does. Just be yourself, and some day you will meet some one who will love you for just what you are.

DEAR ANNIE LAURIE: I met a young soldier during the war and loved him from the first. We were engaged, and a week before our marriage was to take place he was taken suddenly ill and died shortly after. I have grieved until I feel as though I want to go with him.

Of all the young men I know I do not and never will care as much for any one as I did for him. I am 19, and have not gone with any one since his death, which took place six months ago.

Please tell me if I should wait and meet him in the next world, or try to love some other man.

BROKEN HEART.

My dear, that you have had such a sorrow so early in life. Try not to brood over your great loss, but invest yourself in other things and other people. Keep busy. This is the greatest thing to do when you have trouble. Fill your mind with so many outside interests that you will not have time to dwell on his memory. Of course, you will never forget the young soldier. He will have a place in your heart all by himself.

But you are young, and have your life all ahead of you. You should some day meet a fine man and love him. This will not be deluged to your soldier boy. He would not want you to narrow your life on account of him.

Don't try to love some one. Wait until love comes. In the meantime go about with all the young people and try to find pleasure in their society. Good luck to you, my dear.

Annie Laurie will welcome letters of inquiry on subjects of feminine interest from young women readers of this paper and will reply to them in these columns. Letters to Miss Laurie should be addressed to her in care of this office.

Revelations of A Wife

By ADELE GARRISON

THE WAY KATHERINE TOOK LILLIAN'S NEWS

An unworthy little feeling, not positive enough to be dubbed envy or jealousy, but having in it elements of both emotions, sprang into life at Lillian's words.

So Katherine was my friend's "face of triumph." In the game she was playing to learn the identity and nefarious design of the man who had been so terribly injured by a motor car just as we were about to overhear his conversation with Katie.

For a tense second the joy with which I was already welcoming Katherine in my thoughts was chilled. Then, with a swift reaction—a feeling of abysmal disgust at my own littleness—I scoured from my soul every vestige of the thought and I frantically hoped that Lillian's keen eyes had not detected any trace of it in my face.

That I would never know, however, and we went on with our plans for Katherine's coming, which included giving her the maximum of rest before sending her to the hospital to care for the wounded man.

"It's a crime to rush her over there so soon after her long train journey," Lillian said, "but I simply am at my wits' end. The people back of that man may appear at any time and I must have somebody on the spot continually."

"If I knew Katherine," I interposed quietly, "and I think I do, there will be nothing in the world she will welcome more than a chance to take up her old profession. She won't feel any fatigue, and I'll wager that a few hours' rest at the longest will be all she will consent to take. Just remember that she hasn't had much physical labor—she has always had a woman accustomed to heavy work, and keeping her tiny house in order and cooking for two must have been child's play to Katherine's capability. But I can read between the lines and see that she is about starved for some outside interest. Can't you imagine how she'll welcome getting into the great game again in any capacity?"

Lillian praised Madge.

"Yes, I can," Lillian answered promptly, "and I wouldn't trade for a farm my first look at her face when she realizes the ruse we have played to get her here."

"Neither would I. Therefore, you and I will go to meet her. Dicky would be sure to get things mixed up."

"What have you told him about Katherine's coming?"

"That she was coming to us for a visit, taking advantage of Jack's proposed trip, and that she probably would do some nursing if she had a good opportunity of course."

Lillian made an exasperated little moue.

"I might have thought of that," she said. "What did you say?"

"Nothing—knowing Dicky," I rejoined dryly. "But you'll be able to manage that end of things through Mother Graham. Just give her a hint of why you want Katherine, and her melodrama-loving soul will straighten Dicky out admirably, so he will not suspect anything."

"You are a very wise, shrewd and helpful lady, my dear," commented Lillian, and there was an approval in her voice which made my heart beat high with pleasure and it partly atoned to my soul for my littleness of a few minutes before. And when, at the day Katherine had named in her telegram came, and I drove Lillian to the station to meet her, there was nothing in my heart but joyous loving welcome for my cousin's wife.

"Oh! Boy!"

We saw her before the train stopped, for in an eagerness almost child-like, she had come as near as she possibly could to the steps of the car. And my thoughts went back swiftly to the days when I first met her, and she had crept swiftly and surely into my heart.

She was as slender, as agile, as girlish in general appearance as she had been then. But the face under the modish gauzy brown veil was thinner than I liked to see it
