—The Thayer Novelty factory in the north end of town now employs forty hands and could employ many more if they had the room as they have more orders than they can fill. While some people think Plymouth is a dead town, all its factories are running a force of hands, new buildings are going up and there is work for everybody.

—Joseph Harker, formerly of this city, has been indicted for voting illegally in Goshen last November. Harker was at work in Plymouth when his parents moved to Goshen last summer and did not go with them, but says his home had always been with them and he and his attorneys contend that when the parents moved to Goshen, Joseph's home was also in Goshen. It is said that a special effort will be made to convict him. The whole question will revolve on how far a man can go toward fixing of his residence by his own declaration.

—Some men get so in the habit of using what is generally looked upon as profane language that it becomes second nature to them. If they could all be brought up as readily as the man in the following anecdote, perhaps their manners would soon be mended. Ex-Governor Taylor, of Tennessee, tells this story: A stranger approached him recently with extended hand and said: "Your face is familiar, where in hell did I meet you?" "I don't know," replied the ex-governor, "what part of hell are you from?"

Rice one of the old settlers and business men of Plymouth but for the past thirty years a resident of Indianapolis, stopped in Plymouth on his way home from Lake Maxinkuckee where he has been getting his cottage ready for his family. Mr. Rice and family have taken their summer vacation at the lake for more than forty years.

—Quite a heavy frost fell Saturday morning which was plainly visible in low grounds to early risers, though farmers we have seen are of the opinion that it has done but very little, if any damage. There certainly has been more cold nights thus far this spring than for many years past. Frost on the 8th of June is certainly an unusual thing.

—Major Bitter, the veteran editor of the Rochester Republican, contends that "it is a misfortune to any community to have a man devoid of the principles of common humanity become the controlling editor of a newspaper. One who is avaricious, untruthful, devoid of conscience is not fit to become a public instructor."

—Among the large body of men from the country who were repainting and repairing the Reformed parsonage Tuesday were John W. Nichols of Twin Lakes. He says it's awful hot and if he was not convinced that it took work as well as faith to keep a parsonage in good shape he would be at home. But a little pumping brought out the fact that it was the good dinner that John knew he would get that brought him here.

While this encouraging report is made for this country, the intelligence from both France and Germany is that the crop will be unusually light.

—Indianapolis is to have a handsome and modern new hotel to be erected on the site of the present Bates house. The new hotel is to be called the Claypool. It will be eight stories high absolutely fire proof, of splendid style and equipment and will represent an outlay of $1,500,000. The contract for the structure has just been awarded to Geo. E. Swift and Co., of Chicago, and they are given fourteen months in which to complete the building for occupancy.

—Life insurance companies are about to introduce a new feature in issuing policies. It is proposed to create three divisions—one comprising those who abstain wholly from the use of intoxicants; second, those who drink moderately; third, persons who take their toddy regularly. Different rates will be fixed for these three divisions. The rate for total abstainers will be lowest, it being held that risks on their lives are safer and that they live longer than those indulging in intoxicants. Such a system is said to have prevailed in Europe for some years and to have worked satisfactorily.

The First National Bank of Marshall County.

The above bank has increased its capital stock $15,000.00, and this increase has been principally subscribed for by a number of the leading business men of this city and country, who have not heretofore been identified with the institution.

The association of these new enterprising and substantial citizens with this already well established and prosperous financial institution augurs well. With a substantial capital now of $100,000.00 in capital, surplus, and undivided profits, this bank promises still greater usefulness to the public, who are assured, that every courtesy and consideration will be accorded all having business there with in the future, as has been the endeavor of those having charge of its affairs in the past.

Its circulation will be promptly increased to the full amount of its capital.
