The great fox hunt which was billed so extensively by the Black and Tan sporting club, drew a large crowd of men, most of them going away badly disappointed. The club purchased a pet fox for the chase, he was taken to the east end of the village and turned loose. He being a pet did not care to run, so they took the most popular dog, placed upon his face a base ball masque, or muzzle, started him after the fox. At first the fox refused to run, finally he started for the road, followed it for a quarter of a mile, then took to the woods, which was the last glimps of Mr. fox the sports were favored with.
