The lady of the plains. A young woman from the treeless plains of the West had come to Boston to a music school on her first trip East, and among the first persons she met at her boarding house was a stout, well-dressed man.

"I saw at one place in Pennsylvania 100 sawlogs in one pile."

"A hundred?" he asked, with a tinge of incredulity.

"That's what they told me. You know, they don't have sawlogs where I came from."

"Is that so? You ought to come to Maine once."

"Do you have them there?"

"Do we? Why, my dear young lady, sawlogs grow on trees in Maine."

"Really?" she asked, in open-eyed astonishment.

"It's a literal fact," he asserted positively.

"Well, I don't believe it," she contended, and to what he could, he could not convince her that he was telling plain, unadorned truth.—Detroit Free Press.
