Lieutenant O'Mally was one of the popular young men of Albany, and a personal friend of G. B. Price, of this city.

Orr Stout had an experience Monday which he does not care to repeat, and is congratulating himself on getting out of it as well as he did. He was driving the big bus to the early morning train, and when in front of the residence of Mrs. L. P. Sigler ran into a telephone wire which was hanging across the street, breaking the wind shield and catching Orr across the nose and face, cutting and burning his face painfully, but he made the train with his passengers, although he lost his cap in the scrimmage with the wire.

Corporal Arthur F. Hale, who has been at Camp Pike, Arkansas, since December, has been transferred to Camp Hancock, Augusta, Georgia. This is an old national guard encampment. The soldiers are coming in at the rate of 7,000 per week. The camp is supposed to hold 40,000 men and a fine place. They are going to make this camp a machine gun center with nothing but M. G.'s. Arthur writes that he likes his location very much. Augusta is a fine place but says he is glad he spent the winter south as the weather is very hot and goes quite hard with the northern breeze.

The parcel post proves mighty handy to a good many people, and The Reporter man has good cause to rejoice over it, for Tuesday by parcel post we received a nice box of great big juicy strawberries from Mrs. J. O. Garner, of Edgemoor township, which are the finest we have seen this season, both as to size and flavor. We sure appreciate Mrs. Garner's thoughtfulness in remembering the editor.

Electric light linemen last week discovered one of the causes of the interruption in the service last week. About a mile and a half west of Decatur some one had cut a section of barbed wire from a fence, carefully bent the ends and then thrown it over the high transmission wires. The men took several days to locate the trouble which caused a great deal of inconvenience to both the company and the patrons. There is a heavy penalty for tampering with electric transmission lines, and the company would pay a good reward to find out who did this dirty piece of work.

A Birthday Surprise.

Monday being Miss Muriel Clawson's eighteenth birthday, her mother planned a neat surprise for her. On account of the bad weather only a few were present. The evening was spent in music and games which were enjoyed by all. Dainty refreshments consisting of ice cream, cake and cookies were served. Muriel departed at a late hour wishing Muriel many more such happy birthdays. Those present were:

Misses Mae Scott, Gladys Buck, Lenore and Helen Miller, William Gibson and Myrtle Petticoat and Nea McCoullough, and Messrs. Edward Smith and Dewey McCoullough.

Learning to Give.

The six great undertakings to raise funds for war purposes in America—the three Liberty loans, the Red Cross subscriptions and the Red Triangle donation—point to one trend of thought and action in our country. This is the spending of money for purposes not directly promising immediate pleasure or profit to the individual.

As yet, we have not really begun to sacrifice. It cannot be said, therefore, that the sums given to these six great undertakings represent actual deprivation through the giving up of other things we earnestly desired or really needed. It is to be supposed that giving will necessitate this before the war ends. It has not yet made such a demand.

Nevertheless, American people are learning to spend money swiftly, and with little thought of what shall be the financial return—if there is to be any. It is true that bond buying is an investment, and a very good one, too. Still, not many people have subscribed to the government loan because of the opportunity to safeguard their funds and obtain a nice return on the investment. By far the larger portion of the population bought bonds because of their knowledge that the republic would be helped by getting their money. The increasing ease with which the succeeding loans were placed, as well as the bettering spirit which marked the response to the other calls for money, can but convince the student of affairs that the people of the United States are learning to give and will never again get out of practice in this pastime or art or undertaking.

Learning to give! That is truly an achievement. In the past, we have been content to permit a few of the wealthiest people of the world to have a monopoly on real giving. Now everybody is emulating those former occasional donors of handsome slices of their income and principal. With America but one year at war, her people are yielding up their money with a promptitude and a cheerfulness which bode fine conditions for the future—after the war.

For it cannot be that equally cheerful giving will not be seen then. The needs will be many, and very worthy. Education, social needs, philanthropy, civic development, health betterment—these are some of the causes to which large sums of money—large as we have now come to speak of expenditures—will be devoted. Where formerly we paid out a few hundred thousand dollars on a city's schools we shall feel the necessity of doubling and trebling the expenditure. Where we gave a few cents on the $100 valuation as taxes for public improvements we shall appreciate the wisdom of paying adequately for the undertakings it is desired to carry out.

The people are learning to give—learning, indeed, to spend. In the old days, spending was irregular, unwise, selfish to a large degree. The old order is passing away. The new method is worthy the best civilization of the world's best age.—St. Joe Gazette.
