Mothers and Wives.

Of this country—those who after months and even years of suffering, have been restored to health and strength by that good old-fashioned root and herb remedy, Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound—are the ones who have spread the good news of health restored, until today there is hardly a town so small that the women who suffer from female ailments do not depend upon Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to restore health.—Advertisement.

MONTROSE.

Easter was observed in a fitting manner in all the churches. St. Barnabas' Episcopal church never looked prettier on an Easter morning, with decorations of potted plants and ferns. The Rev. Jones of Keokuk conducted the services. The sermon was of unusual interest to the members and congregation. The choir put on a new appearance, with special selections. Calla lilies were sent from San Francisco by John Ward, a valued member of this church some years ago. Sunday ended the Lenten obligation. Tuesday morning at St. Barnabas' at 9 o'clock, the Rev. John C. Sage of Keokuk, conducted the monthly holy communion services. Mrs. Adolph Johnson of room 5, Marshalltown Soldiers' home, spent a few days here renewing old friendships and says Mr. Johnson is disabled from diseases incident to declining years. Mr. Johnson was a soldier of the civil war, Company B, Seventeenth Iowa Infantry. Mr. and Mrs. Guy Singer and children of Ft. Madison came down to enjoy Easter eggs with their parents Wm. Singer and family, and Joseph Amidon and family. The home of Wm. McCann is under quarantine for small pox. Mrs. David Houghton has recovered from a siege of sickness and is her former self again. Fishermen here shipped three thousand pounds of the finny tribe to northern markets from this place last week. Monroese has become a central fish market. Plum trees are in full bloom in this vicinity and indications point to a bumper crop. Silvers & Son have contracted for

ARBOR DAY TO BE OBSERVED FRIDAY

Observance Originated With J. Sterling Morton, One Time Secretary of Agriculture, Department of U. S.

THE CUSTOM HAS GROWN

Idea of Planting One Tree or Vine on That Day Grew From Some of the Practices of Pioneers.

Friday will be Arbor day. Arbor day is of special importance because it is also Bird day. One who loves the trees and birds has written on the day as follows: J. Sterling Morton, once secretary of the United States department of agriculture, originated Arbor day in Nebraska in 1872. His idea was a marvelous success the first year, and still more so each succeeding year. So remarkable have been the results of Arbor day in Nebraska that its originator is gratefully recognized as the great benefactor of his state. Where, twenty years ago, the books said trees would not grow, the settler who does not plant them is the exception. Arbor day in Iowa is observed on Friday, and of late years the beautiful old custom of planting a tree upon Arbor day has been in many sections of the state neglected. Schools all over the state, whether in city or town, should join in planting with a song, or a few appropriate simple exercises, one or more trees upon the school premises. The result will be appreciated by future generations of school children. "Apple-Seed John," the man who planted an apple seed every time he ate an apple, was responsible for the thousands of apple trees which grace one of the mid-western states. It is a simple thing to stop by the roadside and bury the apple core, but in this hurly-burly life of the times, how many stop to do it? In the early days when the pioneers were settling our country from Maine to the gulf and from the Atlantic coast westward, they were obliged to clear space among the trees to make room for building their homes and cultivating their crops. Thus it became a general practice to clear away trees. Trees were so plentiful that their value was not properly appreciated and it was not until the clearings had been made and the forests depleted that our people began to appreciate the value of trees which had been so wantonly destroyed. When the people living in the wooded sections of the east and central states moved westward to the treeless plains beyond the Missouri river, they soon felt the need of trees about the home and also appreciated the value of the tree as a protector and a companion to the better impulses of the mind. In Iowa, it is known as Arbor and Bird day, the two being so closely allied to one another. Without the trees, there are no birds; without the birds, we set the trees that we may have more birds. He also quotes William Cullen Bryant as follows: Come, let us plant the apple tree! Cleave the tough greenward with the spade; Wide let its hollow bed be made; There gently lay the roots, and there stir the dark mold with kindly care. And press it o'er them tenderly. As round the sleeping infant's feet We softly fold the cradle sheet; So plant we the apple tree? What plant we in this apple tree? Buds which the breath of summer days Shall lengthen into leafy sprays; Boughs where the thrush with crimson breast Shall haunt and sing, and hide her nest; We plant upon the sunny lea A shadow for the noontide hour. A shelter from the summer shower. When we plant the apple tree.

Appeal and Proclamation.

"Iowa has spent seven millions dollars on new school buildings within the last three years. There are one hundred and sixty-seven consolidated schools in the state. The new buildings are, for the most part, beautiful and equipped with all modern improvements. The grounds about them, as a rule, are commodious. Should not these new buildings have beautiful settings? Should not the children be taught to assist in protecting every plant, tree and shrub placed on the grounds? Will not the people think of these things and delay no longer? In order that they may, I hereby name and proclaim as Arbor day, Friday, April 28, 1916, and beg that meetings be called at once to arrange for a proper observance of the day—beg that somebody in each community will take the initiative in behalf of a better and more beautiful state and finer ideals among the people and urge that not
