CARE OF THE BABY.

Don't stuff the baby until nature rebels by an emesis.

Don't forget that it wants cool water to drink occasionally.

Don't be afraid to use common sense in the care of your baby.

Don't expect the baby to be perfectly well unless you feed it on nature's food—mother's milk.

Don't bundle up its head to suffocation. Don't cover up its head except in a blast of wind.

Don't forget that regularity in meal-time is just as necessary for your little one as for yourself.

At night be sure the room is well ventilated. Its susceptibility to sickness is in inverse ratio to the amount of good pure air you provide for its lungs.

Don't keep the baby in the house one minute that it is possible to have it out of doors. A baby kept out in the air and sunshine will not be cross and irritable.

Don't fasten its clothes like a vise and then think it is going to be comfortable. A child can't be happy unless it can move every muscle of its body freely.

Don't put too many clothes on the baby, and, above all, don't inflict it with long clothes. Least of all should this be done during its first few months of life, when it is weaker than at any other time.

Effusiveness or Coldness.

Many women are so afraid of gushing that they actually become ungracious. They hate insincerity so deeply that in avoiding insincere gratitude they assume an insincere indifference. If one must choose between being either effusive or cold it is surely better to be the former. Indifference or an indifferent manner has parted more friends than gush ever did. If one has entertained a friend or gone out of his way to do a favor or bestowed a gift he will be pretty sure not to mind effusiveness, but he will find it hard to excuse indifference or lack of appreciation. People inveigh over the perfunctoriness of much of the bridal gift giving, but the notes that some brides send out acknowledging their wedding presents are often so perfunctory and vague that they are like a dash of cold water in the face of the giver. There is a gentle art of saying thank you. It is one that will stand cultivating.

The Fashionable English Woman. The fashionable English woman crimps and fluffs her hair until it "pumps" all around her head like a rather stiff halo, and then she tides it all down with a hair net, both fore and aft. But the hair is a very pretty color, and they have the most beautiful complexion and brilliant coloring to be found in the whole world. There are no middle aged women. They are either young and fresh or old and capped. When the wrinkles begin to come they are immediately and persistently chased away by an electrical contrivance, massage and plenty of expensive cold cream. One rarely sees a gray haired woman, at least not a fashionable one, for when the hair begins to whiten she tints it until it is a beautiful reddish blond brown, and she then goes tripping down the ladder of life utterly and gayly unconscious of the devastating footprints of Father Time.—Good Housekeeping.
