A Delhi advertiser hits the nail on the head when he says in his advertisement in the Hopkinton Leader "Help Delhi grow, Chicago is big enough." That is the principle that lies at the bottom of all home trading. The resident of the small town who goes to the near by city to do his trading helps that place and diminishes the business of the home town. So, too, the farmer living near the town where he gets his mail, and accommodations as he needs them, helps Chicago grow and stunts the town that he should be interested in, when he sends his orders to the mail order houses.
