EARL FAULKNER

Son of Judge H. C. Faulkner,
Died Monday Morning
After a Short Illness.

How truly it is said that the good die young.

Little Earl was a favorite child with the untire town. Unlike most boys of his age, he never found pleasure in annoying larger ones or trying to disobey the wishes or request of his parents.

On the street he was always manly and polite to all he met.

Last Saturday night one week ago, at the family home on Main street, he thinking to have some innocent sport, prepared what is familiarly known to the children as a "Jack-o-lantern" which he had made from a pumpkin and candle; this he had placed in an apple tree in the yard. In turning to leave the tree he struck his leg against a large stone which bruised the limb a bit, but nothing was thought of it.

On Sunday afternoon he was out riding with his parents and seemed happy and gleeful. Upon his return home he complained of being ill, and his mother gave him some medicine. Monday morning a physician was called and it was discovered that he had a high fever. The physician thinking at first that he was taking fevers, but when he was told that Earl had hurt his limb on Saturday night he examined it and found that there was the seat of the trouble.

Immediately hot poultices were applied to the wounded member but the bacteria had become seated and there was no checking it, and the limb soon began to swell and puss began to form. The physicians thought that poultices would give relief, but in this they were mistaken, and on Friday it was decided that an operation was necessary.

Dr. Black, of Knoxville, an expert surgeon, was hastily called by wire, and he came as quickly as possible, arriving Saturday at midnight. He was assisted by Drs. Burnside and Lock and performed a very difficult operation upon the limb, splitting the flesh open to the bone, thoroughly cleansing and removing all the puss and diseased portion of the bone. This gave relief to the intense suffering which little Earl had been bearing for the past five days and nights; but alas! it was too late, the strain which he had endured had been too great for his little body, and the shock of the operation was more than his constitution was able to bear, and at 4 o'clock on Monday morning, after just one week of intense suffering he closed his eyes in the sleep that knows no waking.

When his father, Judge Faulkner, was called home from London, where he was holding Circuit Court Friday, Earl told him that he could not get well, that the suffering would kill him, seeming to realize the fate, yet he never murmured.

Shortly before the death cord was snapped he seemed to be relieved of the suffering and then a pleasant smile lit up his countenance as he looked about the room to bid the members of the family a last good-bye before crossing the river of Death.

Earl T. Faulkner was born November 24, 1894, and died October 24, 1904, liking just one month of being ten years of age. He was a constant attendant in Sunday-school, and was an unusually bright child.

The funeral services were conducted at the Christian church Tuesday morning, led by Rev. T. M. Myers, assisted by Rev. J. P. Faulkner, an uncle to the deceased.

The church was not large enough to hold the gathering of friends who had assembled to pay their last respects to the departed.

The tribute paid by the pastor and also by Prof. Faulkner, his teacher, as well as that of Supt. Tinsley, of the Sunday school, only showed the esteem in which he was held by all.

The following young men acted as pall-bearers: Lynn Golden, Walter Barner, Ralph Tuggle, Alex Sevier, Jr., Ray Fellows, Ollie Ragan.

After the services at church the remains were bourn to the beautiful cemetery on the hill where beneath banks of flowers sleeps the remains of the once light-hearted, noble Earl Faulkner.

The ADVOCATE joins the many friends in extending to the grief-stricken family our warmest sympathy in the hour of their sore affliction, and can only say it was God's will, and we should not mourn as those who have no hope, but rather prepare to meet him on the other shore, where there will be no more suffering, no more parting and no more shedding of tears.

He cannot return to us, but we can prepare to go to him. Again we say how true that the good die young.

In to-day's issue can be found the official announcement of G. F. Bretz, of this city, for the office of Magistrate in the First district. Mr. Bretz is well known to perhaps almost every voter in the district, he being a butcher, has bought stock from all the farmers throughout this section, and in this way has circulated many hundreds of dollars among the home people.

As to his political record, Mr. Bretz has been a Republican from the time the party was first organized, and served in the Federal army during the struggle of 1860-65.

He is a Past Commander of Maj. Harris' Post, No. 39, Department of Kentucky, G. A. R., and has served his country with credit to himself and honor to the country over which floats the stars and stripes.

As a financier and business man, Mr. Bretz has had years of experience, and should the people of his district decide to honor him with the office to which he aspires, they will find they have made no mistake, as he is thoroughly familiar with the duties of the office and would prove a safe and economical official, and would closely guard the expenditure of the people's money and see to it that it was not recklessly squandered.

He places his claims in the hands of the party that he has served so faithfully, relying upon it to reward him in his desire, and if elected promises to discharge the duties to the best of his ability.

Give his claim a fair consideration when you go to the polls to select a Magistrate in the First district.

A SQUARE DEAL

For Every Man---What Roosevelt Stands for.

Taken From a Collection of Quotations From the Addresses of Roosevelt.

A man to be a good American must be straight, and he must be strong.

Anarchy is a crime against the whole human race; and all mankind should band against the anarchist. His crime should be made an offense against the law of nations, like piracy and that form of man-stealing known as the "slave trade; for it is far blacker infamy than either.

I am certain that those who have had experience in the army and navy have seen that in the long run the man who is a decent man is apt to be the man who is the best soldier.

Government of the people, by the people, for the people, will perish from the face of the earth if bribery is tolerated.

The wage-worker is well off only when the rest of the country is well off; and he can best contribute to this general well-being by showing sanity and a firm purpose to do justice to others.

Each of us needs at times to have a helping hand stretched out to him or her. Every one of us slips on some occasion, and shame to his fellow who then refuses to stretch out the hand that should always be ready to help the man who stumbles.

The first requisite of a good citizen in this Republic of ours is that he shall be able and willing to pull his weight.

A man, to be a good citizen, must first be a good bread-winner, a good husband, a good father—I hope the father of many healthy children; just as a woman's first duty is to be a good housewife and mother.

The good citizen is the man who, whatever his wealth or his poverty, strives manfully to do his duty to himself, to his family, to his neighbor, to the State; who is incapable of the baseness which manifests itself either in arrogance or in envy, but who, while demanding justice for himself, is no less scrupulous to do justice to others.

A man who is to lead a clean and honorable life must inevitably suffer if his speech likewise is not clean and honorable.

There is no room in our healthy American life for the mere idler, for the man or the woman whose object it is throughout life to shirk the duties which life ought to bring.

No matter what the school, what the university, every American who has a school training, a university training, has obtained something given to him outright by the State.

Fail to understand how any man convinced of his country's greatness and glad that his country should challenge with proud confidence its mighty future can be anything but an expansionist.

No one thing can do more to offset the tendency toward an unhealthy growth from the country into the city than the making and keeping of good roads,

This country has, and this country needs better paid, better educated, better fed and better clothed, working men, of a higher type, than are to be found in any foreign country.

There are many different kinds of work to do; but so long as the work is honorable, is necessary, and is well done, the man who does it well is entitled to the respect of his fellows.

In all history I do not believe that there is to be found an orator whose speeches will last as enduringly as certain of the speeches of Lincoln; and in all history with the sole exception of the man who founded this Republic, I do not think there will be found another statesman at once so great and so single-hearted in his devotion to the weal of his people.

The man who counts is not the man who dodges work, but he who goes out into life rejoicing as a strong man to run a race, girding himself for the effort, bound to win and wrest triumph from difficulty and disaster.

The man who is not a tender and considerate husband, a loving and wise father, is not serving the Lord when he goes to church.

The woman who has borne, and who has reared, as they should be reared, a family of children, has in the most emphatic manner deserved well of the Republic.

It seems to me that it is a good thing from every standpoint to let the colored man know that if he shows in a marked degree the qualities of good citizenship the qualities which in the white man we feel are entitled to reward—then he will not be cut off from all hope of similar reward.

"In Summertime Down by the Sea."

This is the title of a new and magnificent Song and Chorus written by Alfred J. Doyle, with a remarkably pretty Waltz Chorus. This song will surely be admired by everybody.

In Summertime, down by the sea, The only real place boys for me, Take a ride on a trolley, get there before dark,

Take your sweetheart to Dream-land or to Luna Park

In Summertime down by the sea, The place where we all like to be;

Where the breeze softly blows, And where every one goes,

In Summertime, Down by the sea,

CANDIDATES

For Various County Officers
Began a Vigorous Campaign Last Monday.

Last Monday morning the various candidates for the nomination for county offices opened the campaign of their speaking tour at the Court-house in this city.

The preliminaries that were necessary before the speaking begun consumed some time, but after it was all arranged, Judge T. J. Wyatt lead out in a speech of twenty minutes, in which he recited quite a bit of his past record, and asked the people to give him another term of public office.

He was followed by Rev. T. J. Stamper, who made a strong speech, and urged his claim upon the people and asked that they give him a trial as County Judge, and promised them that if elected he would try as hard to make a good county judge as he did to preach the gospel.

He was followed by Flem D. Sampson who, after a few complimentary remarks concerning Rev. Stamper, turned his attention to Judge Wyatt and showed him up in a strong light. He said that thirty years ago Judge Wyatt, then a young man and an orphan, asked the people of Knox county to make him their county court clerk, and they did so. Since that time he has eternally been asking for something, and that more than half of that time he has been holding public office and drawing a salary for it, and yet does not pay into the fund any taxes except a poll tax. That while he owns a fine house and lot in town besides a fine, rich farm; yet he has it all under the protecting wing of his good wife in order to protect it.

He also showed how Judge Wyatt had sued the county for a claim as a Commissioner that he had made while holding the office of County Judge and drawing a salary for that. He showed that in the last county race after Wyatt was defeated for county judge by Judge Miller that he employed two strong Democratic attorneys and instituted a contest in order to split the Republican party, and if possible, pave the way to make an independent race.

Judge Miller made the closing speeches for the county judges and showed conclusively that the statement made by Judge Wyatt in the circulars were not facts, and added that if the records showed that, he would quit the race, sign a libel and leave the county.

A three-minute speech was allowed to each candidate in rebuttal, and Judge Wyatt then tried to get up for a third speech but was howled down by the audience.

It was the consensus of opinion that Mr. Sampson got decidedly the best of the argument in the opening.

W. R. Lay and J. H. Catron had quite a spirited contest in their debate, and the crowd was about equally divided, so far as the noise was concerned, but the result will be that Lay's friends will put forth more of an effort in behalf of his campaign.

The Superintendent's race was the next on the docket, and a very interesting discussion between Messrs. Hignite and Parker followed.

Then came the County Clerk's, and by the time they had all spoken around once the crowd was tired and had almost left the court room.

There were quite a lot of other candidates present who desired to be heard, but the speakers had consumed the day and it was necessary to postpone their speeches until their next appointment.

The agreement signed by all the various candidates concerning the use of whisky at their speakings throughout the county is very commendable, and which we publish here in full as follows:

We, the undersigned candidates for nomination for the various county offices of Knox county, to be voted in the Republican primary election to be held November 12, 1904, hereby agree that we will not in any way, directly or indirectly, use or cause to be used or allow to be used for us or in our behalf any spirituous, vinous or malt liquors with the voters and citizens of Knox county during the series of public speaking now advertised, beginning October 24th and ending November 5th. This agreement to prove binding on the candidate as soon as the candidate for the office for which such person may be a candidate signs same.
