A man was once caught in a severe storm. The lightning flashed, the thunder roared and the rain fell in torrents. Terrified he crawled into a log for shelter. When the storm abated, he attempted to crawl out, and was scared worse than ever, when he found that the log had swollen and had him fast. Of course, to yell for help was useless, and death was staring him in the face, all his sins arose like a mountain before him, but the greatest of all was his failure to pay for his subscription to his home paper. Then he felt so small that he crawled out and made a dash for the printing office with the much needed $.
