LOCALS

In this issue we place the time card of the Cumberland Railroad Company, and call your attention to the fact that you can spend a day on the Historic old Brush Creek and get a train up or down this Railroad almost like an Electric line. See the great improvements in the way of mining, visit the great Power houses where electricity is produced to do the mining and hauling of hundreds of tons of coal every hour of the day. It will not be long until this line of road will be extended into Jellico and couple itself with the L. & N. and the Southern roads.

Letting Down The Bars of Virtue

Once the virtue of women was safeguarded by three great controls. These were the religious control, the family control, and the control by public opinion in a watchful community.

In the earlier times the evening hours of the girl were watched over. When she went out it was to a friend's house with an older woman. When she made an outing, a picnic, a dance, a theater party it was with a group of young persons, all of them known to each other. And all the group were personally known to the community in which they did their merrymaking, so that a social control wrapped round each one of them. No hour of recreation but what was passed within hail of older, friendly persons. That was the life of the American girl in earlier days.

And now in the large cities comes a sudden removal of almost all observation from the girl's daily life. Her evenings are her own, as never before in history. She is free to go out among strangers, to be introduced by a stranger to a stranger, and so passed along whatever unknown predatory male deems it worth his while to reach for her.

She is free to wander into the public dance hall, which are the chief form of recreation in the cities, and spend five hours in dancing with strangers till excitement, and possibly also wine, have weakened her will. And among those crowds of pleasureseekers not one person cares whether she emerges innocent or tainted. And all that night life is surrounded by the vast secrecy of the city. Of the home restraint we have the testimony of many girls that they have grown weary. Parents state that the girl is "wild and cannot be controlled. The girl tells how, being tired of the home she came to the town and boarded. In the anxious, toil-worn life of the family, her situation was not searched and analyzed. Families are absorbed in the struggle for existence.

The father's wages have not kept pace with the steady increases in the cost of living, but his family is larger; exerts little while more costly more of a burden to his perplexed mind and aging body.

The mother is spent with child bearing and the constant fret of the meal getting the younger children under foot.

Often the situation is still further intensified by outside work added to the day's duties—work of washing, clothes floor scrubbing in an office building.

She is troubled and overwhelmed by the insistent duties lying straight ahead of her, and she has no strength with which to cope with the more hidden problems of the daughter's life. Those subtler matters are never voluntarily set before her to solve, because the girl is reticent of her perplexities.—Collier's Weekly.

NOW HER FRIENDS HARDLY KNOW HER

But This Does Not Bother Mrs. Burton, Under the Circumstances.

Houston, Texas.—In an interesting letter from this city, Mrs. S. C. Burton writes as follows: "I think it is my duty to tell you what your medicine, Cardui, the woman's tonic, has done for me.

I was down sick with womanly trouble, and my mother advised several different treatments, but they didn't seem to do me any good. I lingered along for three or four months, and for three weeks, I was in bed, so sick I couldn't bear for any one to walk across the floor.

My husband advised me to try Cardui, the woman's tonic. I have taken two bottles of Cardui, am feeling fine, gained 15 pounds and do all of my housework. Friends hardly know me, I am so well."

If you suffer from any of the ailments so common to women, don't allow the trouble to become chronic. Begin taking Cardui to-day. It is purely vegetable, its ingredients acting in a gentle, natural way on the weakened womanly constitution. You run no risk in trying Cardui. It has been helping weak women back to health and strength for more than 50 years. It will help you. At all dealers.
