WAR SAVINGS STAMPS MATURE

Columbus, Ohio, Nov. 21, 1922,
Dear Mr. Editor:

You are perhaps aware of the fact that on January 1st, next the 1918 series of War Savings Stamps mature. These stamps, were sold mostly to persons of small means who are afforded the least protection against the wiles of the wild-cat stock salesman. It is estimated that approximately $90,000,000 of these stamps remain in the hands of the public residing in the Fourth Federal Reserve District, and this vast sum, of course, will attract the attention of the concerns handling worthless stock propositions.

Under the plan just released by the Treasury Department, the holders of these 1918 stamps can now exchange them at their face value of $5.00 each for Treasury Savings Certificates, a security similar in all respects to War Savings Stamps except that they are issued in denominations of $1000, $100 and $25.

In view of the number of people who invested in the War Savings Stamps, this entire proposition is of vital importance in every community, and we trust that you will assist us in this very important undertaking by advising your readers either to exchange their 1918 War Savings Stamps for Treasury Savings Certificates, or, in the event that they desire to cash the stamps, that they consult with the officials of the financial institution where they do business, respecting the reinvestment of the money derived from the redemption of the 1918 War Savings Stamps. In other words, we solicit your co-operation in order to safeguard the money which the owners of these stamps will derive from their redemption.

Thanking you very heartily for the splendid co-operation you have extended to us in the past, and knowing that you will do your utmost to assist us in this most important undertaking, I am,
Cordially yours,
P. J. WOOD,

Director, Savings Division Fourth Federal Reserve District.

CAROLINA WAYS

Editorial From The Pineville Sun

What the governor of North Carolina said to the governor of South Carolina, touching on an obsolete hospitality, has long been history, but probably will long remain as a colorful story of the old South.

The governor of North Carolina, however, has risen to the occasion again and in opening the Democratic state campaign in the Tarheel state, said:

"We authorized $50,000,000 for roads. The people are paying automobile tax anyway. We increased it some, not much; put 1 cent per gallon on gasoline, and converted it all into an interest paying fund, and instead of frittering as it came, trying to build roads with it, we are selling the bonds and building the finest system of highways in America. We did not increase tax on anybody to do it except the automobile owners, and on him little.

We simply applied sound business principles to the situation and behold the magic-like construction of the system."

To which the Elizabethtown News has made the following pertinent comment:

This is just the proposition which was defeated in the Kentucky legislature last winter because it was dragged into politics.

If North Carolina can carry and arrange to pay a $50,000,000 bond issue for roads by automobile taxes and a tax on gasoline, so can Kentucky. There are more automobiles in this state than in the Old North State and we consume more gasoline. The assessable wealth is also greater in Kentucky and so is the population.

It was not made a political issue in North Carolina and it should not be made one in Kentucky. The News is heartily in favor of submitting the bond issue for roads to the people by the next legislature, Democratic or Republican party having control of the affairs of the state. Politics has been the bane of Kentucky and we want none of it in the road proposition.

Until Kentucky takes over and builds all of the principal highways and maintains them, which is provided for in the act, the counties cannot build roads leading into them.

Take Hardin county for instance. When the Dixie Highway is built thru the county and the Bardstown and Leitchfield roads are also constructed, the county's road fund is so meager that it is not sufficient to build turnpikes into these roads.

When the state can take over and maintain this 100 miles of road then the county can build roads leading into them.

The News trusts that the bond issue will be submitted to the people by the next legislature and if the cost per mile is properly limited and proper safeguards are placed around the expenditure of the money, we think the people will vote for it, as we are satisfied the automobile and gasoline taxes will retire the bonded debt in thirty years and maintain the roads as they are built.

North Carolina certainly sets a good example for Kentucky.
