DYNAMITE.
Its Invention and History, and How It is Made.

Dynamite is one of the many products or combinations of nitro-glycerine, and is about thirteen times as powerful as gunpowder. The discovery of this dangerous and potent explosive was made in 1846 by Ascanio Sobrero, then a pupil in the laboratory of Pelouze, the eminent French Chemist, who devoted twenty years of his life to the investigation of the chemistry of oils and fats.

Dynamite was patented in the United States May 26, 1863 the patent being granted to Alfred Nobel, of Hamburg, Germany, assignor to John Bandmann, of San Francisco. It consists of a combination of nitro-glycerine with a substance of absorbent power, such, for instance, as fullers' earth or rotten stone. By this composition the explosiveness of the nitro-glycerine is controlled, as it were, and the compound is capable of withstanding all the ordinary dangers of transportation, while at the same time its explosive power is not lessened. The process of manufacture is very simple. You take a certain proportion of nitric and sulphuric acid and mix them with certain other proportions of glycerine, which is the essence of fat, to make the nitro-glycerine. To make dynamite you only need to mix nitro-glycerine with some absorbent material—fuller's earth is the best—to have dynamite.

An Old Letter from the First Kentuckian.
Kentucky State Journal.

The following is a true copy of a letter written by Daniel Boone in 1780 to Thomas Hart. The original is the property of Mr. Henry Clay, of Louisville, and was found among the papers which have come down through several generations as heirlooms in the Clay family. The letter is written on heavy parchment, not ruled, the folding and water seal show that it went without envelop. The chirography is not bad, but the orthography is, as will be seen, not the most perfect, though there will be found many Kentuckians whose education has been less neglected than was Boone's, who perchance would not greatly improve upon it. The capitals are his, and there is no punctuation. The letter is addressed to Col. Thomas Hart, Hagers Town, and is as follows:
