DYNAMITE DENOUNCED.

DISCOVERY OF A MYSTERIOUS DOCUMENT IN LONDON.

Dooming St. Paul's Cathedral and the Daily Telegraph Office--New York Clergymen Denounce the Outrage--The Senate Passes a Resolution.

LONDON, Jan. 27.--Constables Cox and Cole, who were in the explosions, and who were reported greatly improved, are in a precarious condition. There is little hope of their recovery. The anonymous document unearthed Sunday gives the plan of further operations contemplated by the dynamiters, and furnishes descriptions of several of the leaders of the dynamite party. It is believed by the police officials to be an important paper. Among the structures which it says are threatened are St. Paul's Cathedral and the Daily Telegraph building.

Another man has been arrested. He and the prisoner Cunningham, who was arrested Saturday, were arraigned at Bow street station. His alias is Dalton. He was charged with complicity in the explosion at the tower. The prisoners were strongly guarded and constables were distributed in great numbers in all the approaches to the court. Cunningham is of medium height, dark hair, black eyes, with an expression so sinister as to attract immediate attention. His features are sharp. As he stood in the dock he smiled slightly, but appeared ill at ease. Under his overcoat he wore a suit of dark clothes and in his hand carried a hat such is worn by deerstalkers. Police Inspector Abberline deposed that when the prisoner was examined at the tower he was very much confused and his statements were extremely contradictory. He first gave a wrong address, and finally said he lived at Scarborough street, White Chapel, and that he worked at the docks at Liverpool until the beginning of the year, when he came to London in order to better himself. He formerly lived in America, and at one time worked on board the White Star steamer Adriatic.

Inquiry by the police at the prisoner's lodgings showed that he was known there as Dalton. A box and bag found at Scarborough Street House were seized. Inspector Abberline said the police of Liverpool, to whom telegrams had been sent containing the prisoner's statements as to his abode there, could find no trace of him, and the people at his alleged address denied all knowledge of any person calling himself by any of the prisoner's aliases.

The prisoner's hands show evidence of hard work, and he speaks with a strong Irish accent, which, however, is tinged somewhat with the nasal intonation commonly attributed to Americans. On being questioned by the presiding magistrate, the prisoner admitted the statements of Inspector Abberline to be substantially correct, and declined to ask any questions. He was then remanded for a hearing on Tuesday, February 4.

Col. Majendie, chief inspector of explosives made an examination of the scenes of the explosions and allowed none of the debris to be disturbed until photographers had been completed and as many views as were considered necessary by police were taken. As soon as the existing aspect of the wreck had been placed on record, Col. Majendie and his assistants began the work of locating the focus of the explosions.

The police regulations are unique in the history of the metropolis. All persons whose appearance excites suspicion, or who carry parcels not easily recognized as containing ordinary merchandise, are stopped and searched.

People are still nervous and excited. News of any new development is awaited with the greatest anxiety. New York, Jan. 26.--A reporter called upon the pastors of several Roman Catholic churches in this city to obtain views on the dynamite outrages in London. They were free in expressing opinions in hearty denunciation of the acts as the idiotic outbursts of fanatics, who imagined that patriotism gave cover to crimes of the most cowardly sort. Vicar Gen. Preston said: "From every pulpit in the world should go up solemn warnings against such tendencies to crime as are shown in this outrage and the prayers of the Christian world should go up that never again may civilization be dimmed by such a cloud."

Father Dushon, head of Paulist fathers, said: "No wrongs Ireland may have suffered in the past can be put into the scale to counterbalance such an act as that of Saturday, and America should join the other nations of the world in putting down the villains and making them an example to similar disposed persons when caught. The slaughter of the innocent in such a way makes this one of the nameless crimes of the age." Father Healy, o. St. Bernards, said: "Love for Ireland has nothing in common with such methods of assassination. I think it would be a good idea to have some popular impression made in the way of a mass meeting, so that the world may be able to understand how Americans feel on the matter."

WASHINGTON, Jan. 26.--The chair laid before the senate Mr. Bayard's resolution expressing the horror and detestation of the senate at the recent attempts to destroy the houses of parliament, and other buildings in London. Mr. Bayard in moving the adoption of the resolution said he was better satisfied now to ask for the adoption of this resolution, because the senate had an opportunity to affirm deliberately its opinion of the uncivilized, cruel, and barbarous attempt to destroy human life in another country, with its buildings dedicated to the government and the laws, in the vain hope of possibly gaining relief from suffering by thus overthrowing law itself in its very citadel.

It seemed to him proper that the law-making body of the American people should express its antagonism to such proceedings, which by destroying law must necessarily destroy all liberty which could only exist under law. He asked for the yeas and nays on the passage of the resolution.

Mr. Riddleberger said he received with profound sorrow the news referred to, but he was not prepared to say that he received it with indignation. The reason given by the senator from Delaware (Mr. Bayard) that because, forsooth, this was a building where laws were enacted that guaranteed liberty to the subjects of Great Britain, was not sufficient for him (Riddleberger) to vote for the resolution. While the United States was preparing experiments as to methods of blowing ships out of the water by dynamite, it did not become them to say that a people who had not the right to issue a proclamation of war, should not use the same instrument. If we were placed in a country where we could not exercise the God-given right of owning land, even though earned by the sweat of our brows, what would we do? He did not justify the methods used, but was not willing to express sympathy with a nation which allowed none of her sons to exercise that liberty which we enjoy on this side of the Atlantic.

Bayard's resolution adopted by a vote of 63 yeas against 1 nay (Riddleberger). Every senator in the chamber voted.

Minister West's Views. WASHINGTON, Jan. 27.--Minister West says that England has no animosity toward America on account of the dynamite troubles, but is justifiably indignant at the delay in passing suppressive laws against the manufacture of explosives. He remarked that there is no danger of an interruption of the amicable relations of the two countries, and that the passage of the Edmunds bill will be very gratifying to the English people. "America must not imagine," said he, "that it will be exempt from the operations of the dynamite conspirators. The organization, infamous as it is, has an extended sympathy, which, if not checked, will command the active co-operation of all persons who are in favor of upsetting social order. England is not alone interested in exterminating the dynamiters, a fact the United States will speedily realize if it does not adopt a vigorous policy. The time may not be far distant when infernal machines are exploded in the crypt of the American capitol as they were in the house of commons."

Congressman Finerty Retient. WASHINGTON, Jan. 27.--"We have no proof that the explosions were caused by Irishmen," said Representative Finerty. "Should they have been so, it is simply the result of the brutal treatment to which Ireland has been subjected. As an Irish-American, I cannot weep for the woes of a country that never wept for the woes inflicted on my native land. I regret that any innocent person should suffer and I wish that England's policy had left Irishmen a manlier, and more attractive means of proclaiming vengeance and asserting their rights. The pride of England will retard her acknowledgement of fear, but when her passion shall have cooled down, she will see that the only way to abate an evil, which no army can combat, is to remove the causes of dissatisfaction."

MRS. GORDON'S PRETTY PISTOL.

It Perforates a Tramp's Hat and Makes Him Drop a Silver Butter Dish. New York, Jan. 27.--Mrs. Archibald Gordon lives in Castleton Corners, S. I. On Sunday a tramp knocked at her door and begged for a meal. He got plenty to eat in the kitchen. Mrs. Gordon and her maid were alone in the house. After the tramp had finished eating he pulled his chair close to the fire and stuck his feet up near the grate. Mrs. Gordon then told him to go. He picked up a silver butter dish from the table, put it into the pocket of his ragged coat and seated himself again at the grate, remarking, with an oath, that he would get out when he got ready.

Mrs. Gordon happened to have a pretty pearl handled revolver in the pantry. The tramp did not see her as she took the weapon from a shelf. She stepped up behind him and sent a bullet through both sides of the crown of his hat. The bullet flatted itself against the fireplace and dropped at the feet of the astounded intruder. His hat was knocked off by the force of the powder and fell beside the bullet. The tramp jumped to his feet. He found Mrs. Gordon standing near him, and the muzzle of her tiny weapon directly on a line with his eyes. Mrs. Gordon quietly said: "The next shot will go right through your eye. It might kill you, unless you put back that butter dish and get out, as I told you."

The tramp did not stay long enough to pick up his perforated hat. He threw the butter dish on the table and fled. The hat now hangs outside of Mrs. Gordon's back door, where the tramp can get it if he wants it.

Base Ball Differences End.

ST. LOUIS, Jan. 27.--The base ball war has come to an abrupt end. The rival presidents of the Union and American clubs have settled their differences, and Mr. Von der Ahe has promised to no longer oppose Mr. Lucas, but do all in his power toward making a league club here successful. The gentlemen even went so far as to talk over a series of games which their respective clubs shall take part in, in the early springtime. Mr. Von der Ahe's course is generally commended by the base ball public here. It is stated that Dunlap, Shafer, Sweeney and Rowe, of the Lucas nine will be reinstated by the league, and continue with his team.

A Chain of Fatalities.

BELLAIRE, O., Jan. 27.--W. H. Berry and his son Lewis, glassblowers working at Barnesville, received a telegram Saturday, stating that a daughter living in Pittsburg had suddenly died. In hurrying to make the train the old gentleman overexerted himself and dropped dead in the depot from heart disease. The body was coffined and accompanied his son and wife from here. They telegraphed the sad intelligence to Mrs. Berry at Pittsburg, who, already prostrated by the loss of her daughter, died Sunday. The son and wife, therefore, will attend three funerals instead of one.

Stamping Out Horse Disease.

TAYLORVILLE, Ill., Jan. 27.--State Veterinarian Faren has condemned six horses and ordered them to be slaughtered, near here, it having been decided that they were afflicted with glanders. All the other stock is quarantined, and the mangers, feeding troughs and stable ordered burned. All this was the property of Wm. B. Adams, about five miles northwest of this city. The disease is supposed to exist in other parts of the county. Dr. Fahren will come from Decatur next week to investigate its extent and adopt measures to stop it.

DEATH OF TOM FIELDS.

BILL TWEED'S OLD FRIEND AND THE COUNSEL OF HIS RING.

A Fugitive From Justice, Unknown and Forgotten--Looked Upon by Canadians as More Unfortunate than Criminal--His Career in New York.

ST. ANDREWS, Quebec, Jan. 27.--Thomas Craig Fields, ex-corporation attorney of New York, and one of the most notorious and conspicuous figures in the great Tweed ring which plundered the tax-payers of the city out of untold millions of dollars, died here Sunday morning of pneumonia. It will be recalled that after the startling exposures growing out of the discovery of the gigantic stealings of Tweed and his rascally associates, Fields was arrested, but gave bail, which he forfeited and fled to Canada, where he has since resided. He brought with him a large share of his plunder, and up to the time of his death lived in such strict seclusion that he was almost forgotten by the friends who had flocked around him in his palmy days of Boss Tweed's reign.

On February 4, 1872, Fields was indicted by the grand jury of New York for bribery, while a member of the legislature. He was a member of both houses, serving first in the assembly and subsequently in the senate during the session of 1864. On the day following the indictment he was arrested and gave bail in the sum of $25,000. The testimony before the grand jury was to the effect that Fields had been largely instrumental in securing the passage of a bill March 6, 1868, appropriating $50,000 in aid of certain volunteer fire companies; that afterward he entered into a corrupt agreement with certain persons, under which he received 35 per cent. of all moneys that he received for the alleged use of the fire companies, and that he presented fraudulent claims to the comptroller for $171,952.81 and received a warrant for that amount. It was also shown that he agreed with the firemen for 50 per cent. of all additional amounts he could obtain under similar fraudulent schemes. Witnesses also testified that Fields stated to them that he had been compelled to pay one of the two persons who signed the warrant under which he obtained the money, the sum of $71,000, and it was shown that the amount actually received by the fire companies was only $19,746.68.

Subsequent investigation showed that Fields secured from the city money, over $500,000, out of which his share of his spoils was not less than $200,000. In October, 1872, Fields fleeing that his conviction was assured through the efforts of the committee of seventy, which had accumulated a complete network of evidence around him, establishing his guilt, fled from the city. His wife guarded his secret so secretly that not until he had reached Canada did he make known the fact that he had shaken the dust of New York from his feet in exchange for that paradise of thieves, where he now finds a grave. His offense not being an extraditable one no effort was made to secure his return. Tweed had already fled. Harry Gouet has skipped away. Sweeney had also flown, and A. Oakley Hall, only one remained, stood trial, was acquitted. Two years ago Gouet returned and served out his term on Blackwell's Island, but the lawyer thief continued to enjoy his freedom to the end of his earthly career.

During the Tweed regime in the metropolis all middle aged and in ny young New Yorkers will remember Tom Fields' magnificence. He was looked on as one of the world's favorites. His flatterers trooped after him in battalions, until the crash came. It is said here that he brought $2,000,000 into this country with him. The people here say the Canadians treated him like a man who was more unfortunate than criminal. He was, they say, "rolling in riches." He was magnificent even in disaster. He speculated in real estate and lost heavily. Some people thought he was ruined. Then he disappeared suddenly. Many of his most intimate friends did not know where he had gone.

He had purchased a farm from John C. Abbott, now the attorney for the Canadian Pacific Railway. For years Field lived a life of strict retirement. He spent his time in improving land and raising cattle. He was forgotten by the world. His friends and associates were the simple habitants around him. There are very few English people where he made his home, and he was not bothered by news gatherers. But lately he was a new man. He came into the active world again, and recently talked of going back to New York. Since the death of his old enemy, Charles O'Connor, Fields was trying to sell his property. As soon as he succeeded he said he would return to the United States, but he failed to secure a purchaser. He visited Montreal but seldom, and when he did was not known, except to a few.

A Church Broil Over Music Matters.

LOVINGTON, Ill., Jan. 27.--A disgraceful scene occurred in the Christian church at this place on Sunday. For some time the church has been divided on having organ music during services. After the regular services some members opposed the dismissal of the congregation for the purpose of settling the music question. Angry words were freely indulged in by both sexes, women calling men liars and men calling women liars and inviting each other to fight. A general scurrage was avoided by calling in the police. M. H. Minor, a local elder, knocked down F. L. Hastelle, an ex-deacon.

A MINNESOTA LEGISLATOR'S PLAN.

Proposing to Solve the Liquor Problem in a Way That Will Abolish Taxation. ST. PAUL, Jan. 27.--Senator O'Brien has introduced in the senate, and a special committee has recommended its passage, a bill which provides for $5 permits to be issued to such adult male residents of the state as can prove to village trustees, town supervisors or city aldermen that they are only moderate drinkers and that their families and friends are not liable to suffer want or disgrace through their indulgence. Every resident who drinks in a saloon or public place must have such a permit, and any infringement of the law is punishable by fine for each offense, the money for such permits and fines to be converted into the general reserve fund in the several counties. Senator O'Brien is satisfied that the amount received would soon be so large that all other taxes could be abolished. Every man would have a permit, for to be without one would give rise to the suspicion that he could not get the needed certificate.

Senator O'Brien said he never saw a Maine man who wasn't a prohibitionist by profession, and by practice the other thing, and he proposes to put Maine and other prohibitionists, of whom there are a number in each house, on the record as in favor of or opposed to the only practicable solution of the liquor problem. He regards his bill as such solution.

Alive, Though Officially Dead.

KINGSTON, N. Y., Jan. 27.--A man was found dead near this city a short time ago, and Coroner Rice, of Rondout, held an inquest. A number of witnesses identified the corpse as that of a Polish peddler, who for years past sold cheap jewelry and spectacles at farm houses between Catskill and Tappan, on the west bank of the Hudson, and between Peekskill and Hudson on the other side. A verdict was rendered that the deceased came to his death from exposure.

One night last week Coroner Rice was awakened by a very angry man, who, in broken English, demanded to know why he had been declared a dead man, and who asked him if he thought such a decision was that of an honest man. The coroner at first supposed he had a crank to deal with, but when the light revealed the features of the visitor he saw it was the peddler who was supposed to have been buried a short time ago. The indignant Pole proved to the coroner that the witnesses had been mistaken, and then he insisted that he ought to have "his right," even if he was a foreigner and a spectacle peddler. The coroner said he would cheerfully accede to almost anything, so as to satisfy his irate visitor, who said that if he was given a certificate with a big seal to the effect that he was neither dead nor buried, and that he had lost none of his "rights" to own property, he would make no more trouble. The coroner accordingly satisfied the man who had been declared dead, and his visitor departed.

A Sunday Morning Accident.

TOLEDO, Jan. 27.--The special train bearing the members of the union association of lumber dealers was derailed near Dunning, Mich., Sunday morning. Four coaches left the track and two were turned over on their sides and completely demolished. The following persons were injured: P. B. Berch, of Sidney, O.; D. C. Fisher, Findlay, O.; J. W. Aiken, Bergettsburg, Pa. Several others were slightly scratched. With the exception of Mr. Fisher the entire party arrived in this city Sunday evening, two coaches having been furnished by the Michigan and Ohio railroad. The accident happened on the Chicago and Western road and was caused by a defective switch.

Life is Cheap in Texas.

SAN ANGELO, Tex., Jan. 27.--Last Saturday night on the sheep ranch of Fitz Karger, fifteen miles north of here, two Mexicans entered a tent stabled and killed Henry Metzger, and seriously wounded Moore Tremble, Fred Smith and another man. The murderers, named Manuel and Dalsio, were employed herding on a neighboring ranch belonging to Karger. They entered the tent while the men were sleeping. A posse is pursuing the Mexicans. No cause for the attack is known. The wounded men will die.

Bell Telephone Patent Voided.

OTTAWA, Ont., Jan. 27.--The minister of agriculture has delivered a decision in the Bell Telephone Company case, voiding the patent for the reason that the company, or representatives, had imported patented articles after twelve months from the date of the patent; also for not having manufactured in Canada such articles to the extent required by law after two years of existence of their privilege; also for having refused to sell or deliver licenses to persons willing to pay a reasonable price for the private and free use of their patented invention.

A Mexican Crosses.

BROWNSVILLE, TEX., Jan. 27.--Victoriano Nieves is one of the luckiest men in the world. He lives at Carmen, in Mexico, and is worth several millions. Saturday he and his wife celebrated their golden wedding anniversary. It was a great day for Sig. Nieves. He gave a banquet and scattered dollars right and left. Five hundred thousand dollars in one lump was sent to the poor in the locust eaten district, and $10,000 was given to the republic to pay off the American debt.

Couch Ready for Action.

WICHITA, Kas., Jan. 27.--A special messenger is here from Couch's camp at Stillwater, in the Indian territory. He reports that of the boomer's camp 375 men, thoroughly armed, are under Couch, and will resist all attempts to remove them from the territory. An additional detachment of troops has passed through here, en route to reinforce Col. Hatch. Couch's messenger will return at once to Stillwater with supplies.

Is He Recreant?

CINCINNATI, Jan. 27.--Mrs. Nathan Look, of West Sixth street, whose husband travels, selling purses and similar pocket goods, has returned from Indianapolis, where she had been fruitlessly searching for him. The couple were married about three years ago, and her discovery of his correspondence with a former sweetheart, now in Chicago, leads the wife to the belief that she has been abandoned.

Bay State Election Expenses.

BOSTON, Jan. 27.--The financial statement of the Massachusetts independent committee of one hundred shows that the committee spent $17,989 in the state campaign and sent $3,000 to the national committee in New York. The committee received by subscriptions $21,988 and has a balance on hand of $1,019. The republican state committee spent $20,000 in the state campaign.

Murder and Robbery Probable.

ERIC, Pa., Jan. 27.--Thomas Priest, a prominent merchant of Kingsville, O., was found lying on a dark street at midnight, in a dying condition. His skull was frightfully fractured, and a bloody club was found near by. A large sum of money which he had drawn from a bank in the afternoon was missing. There is no clue to his assailant.
