ASHLAND AFIRE.

A Heavy Loss Reported and the Blaze Still Burning—Cattlettsburg is Appealed to for Help.

THREATENED DESTRUCTION.

At 10 o'clock this morning a report reached this city that a fierce fire was raging at Ashland, Boyd County, and that the town was threatened with destruction.

An hour later the report was confirmed. The operator in the Maysville and Big Sandy telegraph office at that place wired Marshall Hall, the operator at this end of the line, brief particulars of the conflagration.

At 10 o'clock the fire had been raging for some time. Five buildings had been destroyed. The flames were spreading and the town was threatened with destruction. The greatest excitement prevailed, and Cattlettsburg had been appealed to for help.

In the excitement and confusion the operator gave no estimate of the damage up to the hour named.

The fire is reported to have started in a building near the river front.

Ashland is a place of considerable size, having a population of about 4,000, and is the eastern terminus of the Maysville and Big Sandy Railroad.

The Virginia Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at its recent session, adopted the following resolutions: Resolved, That we are profoundly convinced of the evil character and influence of the theater and of its power as a promoter of irreligion, immorality and vice.

Resolved, That we most affectionately and earnestly exhort our people to see their faces against this thing as a diversion which can not be used in the name of the Lord Jesus.

The following from the Sunday Morning Call meets with a hearty endorsement from the BULLETIN: "The papers of the State have recently been saying some handsome things about the probable candidacy of our popular Circuit Court Clerk for the Democratic nomination for Clerk of the Court of Appeals. We are not sure that Mr. Parry has ever had any serious thoughts of making the race, but we are sure that he deserves all the clever things that our exchanges have said about him in that connection. If he should conclude to yield to the request of some of his friends and enter the race he would soon convince some of the opposing candidates that he is a great deal younger than his patrician beard indicates. We think, however, it would be more agreeable to Mr. Parry's inclinations to hold his present honorable position than to indulge in a doubtful canvass for the one above mentioned."

COLONEL GREEN'S CONDITION.

Statement From Physician as to Exact Nature of Wound—Who Shot Polk?

At last accounts from Lexington Mr. Green's condition continued favorable, and it is thought he is now out of danger.

The Lexington Transcript has obtained from Dr. Bryan, the attending physician, a statement as to the exact nature of Mr. Green's wound. A synopsis of the statement as published by the Transcript follows: "On last Thursday night, Mr. Green had the first chill; it was not heavy, nor very alarming, but still an untoward symptom. That the ball cut quite a deep wound was plain as the marks made by the bullet scraping against the bone, were plainly to be seen on the surface (the doctor kindly allowed the reporter to examine the bullet) and the wound clearly indicated that the bullet had turned after leaving the pistol and struck Mr. Green either butt-end first or sidewise, tearing a large hole, and making a very ugly, ragged wound. This wound closed on the outside, and this in connection with the chill on Thursday night, gave reason for a slight alarm in the case. However, on Friday the doctor made an incision in the wound, inserted a discharge tube, and he trusts there is nothing serious to be now apprehended from the case, as the character of the discharge is such as to lead to the reasonable conclusion that the wound will heal kindly. The doctor wishes the public to know, most emphatically, that he has never said, and never considered, this wound as a small or trifling one. It has had some serious aspects from the first, and, even now, complications may arise which will cost Mr. Green his life; although, so far as can now be seen, he is in a fair way to recovery, and the doctor hopes for the best in the case."

The belief still prevails at Lexington that a third party took a hand in the affair and fired some of the shots. The Transcript says: "The announcement that Tom Green's pistol contained but four cartridges at the time he met Baldwin makes the presence of four bullet holes in the hotel wall besides the two in Baldwin's body a greater mystery. At the outside Green had but four bullets, now who fired the other two?"

"The theory has been advanced that when Mr. W. H. Polk attempted to prevent the effusion of blood, a friend of Baldwin fired two shots at him. Polk recollects hearing the cry, 'Let them alone, let them fight it out,' and immediately came the firing. Did a friend of Baldwin fire twice at Polk and then turn his gun on Green? That Green was not struck by any of Baldwin's bullets is quite probable, for Mr. Green, it is understood, was not hit at all till after Baldwin fell. It is stated that he is quite positive of this. Taking this for a basis and it would appear that the bullet that struck Green was fired by a third party, for the attending physician says that from the direction of the wound in Green's side it was impossible for the ball that made it to be fired by a person lying on the sidewalk. The wound is horizontal, tending downward from the front, and could not have been fired by Baldwin while lying on his back. A report in the Louisville Times says: 'Still later reports are that the ball which struck Green was fired by a third person—a man of small stature, with a light overcoat, who fired immediately after Baldwin fell and ran out South Limestone street.'

"The 'little man in the light overcoat' as seen by Captain Kidd, Frazier and others, may not be so much of a myth as at first supposed. At any rate, there are the four bullet marks on the wall, and two bullets lodged in Baldwin's body, all which could not have come from Green's pistol which only contained four charges when he commenced firing. The field for speculation and inquiry is ample, let some figure it all out and make the thing clear."

SAYS THE GREENSPRING GAZETTE: "Mr. Gabe Callihan, of near Hunnewell, has a dress made of common oil calico that was worn by himself when a baby, forty-nine years ago. It has been worn by father, son and grandson, and has been worn by twenty-two different children—seven of the children belonging to Mr. Callihan's family. The dress is made after the old style of infant waist, and is none the worse by wear."

FORTY negroes, who have been working above this city on the new railroad, left yesterday for their homes in Virginia. They went by way of the Kentucky Central and Chesapeake and Ohio roads. There was a car-load of them, and they were a happy lot. Each fellow is said to have had a bottle of Kentucky whisky stowed away in his pocket.

PROFESSIONAL PALLBEARING.

A Gloomy Trade, but Very Easy and Eminently Respectable.

He was a gloomy looking sort of person and his face wore an expression of woe that made one think he had stamped there as a sort of trade mark. He was clad in garments of the somberest hue, and from the wide weed on his high hat to the dead polish on his broad soled shoes he looked for all the world like a man in whose family there was a death at least once a year. When he came into the street car a sort of hush fell upon the passengers out of respect for his placid sorrow. By and by the gloomy man was asked if he had met with a bereavement lately.

"No, indeed," he replied, "there has not been a death in my family for years."

"Why, then," asked his neighbor, with more curiosity than politeness, "do you dress in such deep mourning?"

"Oh, that's on account of my business."

"You are an undertaker, then?"

"No, I am a pall bearer," and noting the look of surprise in his interlocutor's face he went on: "Some years ago there was a strike in my trade. I am a carpenter, and during one of my idle days I passed a house where there was a funeral. Stopping to watch it I was approached by the undertaker, who asked me if I was going to the funeral. I said no, that I knew no one there. He then asked me if I had any objection to being a pall bearer. I said I had none, provided I was paid for it, and we finally struck a bargain. I made as much that afternoon as I would had I worked all day at my trade, and since then I have adopted pall bearing as a means of livelihood. I dress in black, as you see, and each morning look over the death notices. I have found that my services are very seldom required where the funeral is that of a young man or woman or where the deceased has belonged to any secret societies, and that my most profitable customers are those who have outlived most of their companions. If the dead person happens to be an unmarried lady past the meridian of life I am nearly always certain of the job. I find that as funerals the proportion of female attendants outnumbers the male about four to one, and that most of the latter are close relatives. As it is generally the rule to select the pall bearers from among those not connected with the family you can see that my services are very frequently in demand. I generally seek out the undertaker and make my bargain with him, and I average about two funerals a day. It is a nice, easy sort of life and eminently respectable. You will have to excuse me now, as I have a funeral in this street and must get off here."—Philadelphia News.
