

Do Canning Factories Pay?

We trust that those engaged in the effort to establish a canning factory here in Maysville will meet with success.

The effort a year or so ago to establish an industry of this sort was allowed to fall through, simply because it was not encouraged as it ought to have been.

Let us hope that the present move will not meet with a similar fate.

If anything is to be done, now is the time. If the establishment is to be put up, the matter should be decided upon as soon as possible, so that arrangements may be made with the gardeners and farmers of the vicinity for the material to be canned.

Will a canning establishment pay? We honestly believe that it will. It will pay those operating it and it will prove a profitable industry for Maysville and vicinity.

From an exchange we learn that a canning factory at Pleasanton, Kansas, during the canning season of 1888 employed two hundred hands, mostly women and girls. They paid for tomatoes 40 cents per bushel in the pod; string beans 40 cents per bushel; apples 25 cents per bushel.

At Garnett, Kansas, the factory paid for tomatoes 18 cents per bushel; sweet corn with the husk on, $7.50 per ton; peas, 40 cents per bushel, apples 25 cents per bushel, and made a handsome profit. The citizens of Garnett thought it was a big thing for their town. One farmer planted fifteen acres of tomatoes and sold them to the factory at 18 cents per bushel, and realized $900. The cans were made at the factory and cost less than 2 1/2 cents per can. At Pleasanton, the machinery, buildings, &c., cost $9,000, while at Garnett $10,000 is invested in buildings, machinery, &c. The machinery for an ordinary-sized factory costs $3,000. At Amelia, in Clermont County, Ohio, 482,000 cans were put up last August and September, and they were grown on two hundred acres of land.

Small Cities, Big Rivals.

We hear a good deal just now in regard to the move to increase the industrial interests of Maysville.

Maysville, however, is not the only city that is courting a "boom." Other places are moving in the matter.

On this point the following from the Cincinnati Time-Star contains a deal of truth:

"The public does not generally understand that one of the prominent reasons for the location of extensive manufacturing interests in large cities was that prior to the enactment of the Inter-State Commerce law much better shipping facilities were afforded. Transportation rates in large population centers were always lower than in villages and towns. All this has been changed by the long and short haul clause. Small towns with consequent small tax rates now have just as advantageous shipping rates as have the larger towns with larger tax rates. They are putting forth the additional inducement of free sites in order to draw manufacturers away from large cities and their urgent invitations, unfortunately for the larger cities, are being accepted."

Let us try and draw some of these factories to Maysville.

If you are interested in the future welfare of Maysville, attend the meeting at the court house to-morrow night.

It is reported that passengers will be hauled over the new road from Maysville to the inauguration at Washington at $5.00 for the round trip.—Bourbon News.

In that event most of us will take in the trip, even if it is a Republican blow-out.

The salaries of most of the employees of the Missouri Pacific Railroad Company have been cut 10 per cent. this week. We don't attribute this to the election of General Harrison. Had the wages been increased instead of reduced, Brother Davis would probably have spoken of it as one of the results of the Republican victory.

Mrs. W. Weichens, of Chillicothe street, is spending the winter with her sisters at Maysville.—Portsmouth Blade.

A Card from Mr. Poyntz.

Editor Bulletin: In replying to numerous inquiries concerning the Presidency of the City Council, I desire to state that upon the occasion of my election to said office in January last, I emphatically asserted that under no circumstance would I consent to the use of my name for a second term, as I then believed, and still cling to the opinion that the office, or position, should be filled by a different member of Council at each ensuing session. Believing rotation in office to be uncompromisingly and absolutely just, I again repeat my sentiments of a year since, in declining to stand for reelection. Very respectfully &c. CHARLES B. POYNTZ. Maysville, Ky., January 9, 1889.

TOBACCO-GROWERS.

The Move to Prevent Over-Cropping and Keep Up Prices Becoming More General.

At a meeting of the producers of tobacco in Bourbon County this week the following resolutions were adopted: Resolved, First, That it is to the highest interest of the tobacco producers of Bourbon County, that no crop be put in this year:

Second, That we recommend the holding of the present crop until better prices are obtainable.

Third, That we recommend a committee be appointed to canvass each precinct to receive signers to an agreement not to sow any seed this year, but said agreement not to be binding unless the entire White Sulphur producing district enters into the agreement.

Fourth, That this meeting appoint delegates to be in readiness to attend any general convention that may be called.

Fifth, That the committees for different precincts be requested to send their lists of signers, at their earliest convenience, to the Committee on Correspondence.

A special from Falmouth says: "A very large and enthusiastic convention of farmers assembled at the court house to inaugurate a movement whereby they could protect themselves from the over-product of tobacco and secure living prices for the crop now in their barns. Resolutions were introduced and unanimously adopted that the farmers would bind themselves not to raise any tobacco the ensuing year and hold the present crop until fair prices could be realized, and those not able to hold over would be aided by their neighbors in retaining their crop. The farmers are thoroughly aroused and mean business, as no other course could be devised for their protection."

The move to prevent over-cropping and thus keep up prices seems to be meeting with more success elsewhere than it did here in Maysville and Mason.

WIND AND FIRE.

The Cyclone's Disastrous Work at Reading, Pennsylvania.

Special to BULLETIN.

CINCINNATI, January 10.—The cyclone yesterday was very disastrous to life and property throughout portions of Pennsylvania.

At Reading, a silk factory was demolished and one hundred of the employes killed or wounded.

A fire at the Reading railroad shops resulted in the burning to death of four men. AMERICAN PRESS.

Mr. John R. Proctor, State Geologist, states that as a result of Mr. Charles Dudley Warner's article on Kentucky, in Harper's Magazine for January, he has received a large number of letters from States in the Northwest and in the East, and that he has no doubt but that it will be followed by a rush of letters from England, where the development of Southeast Kentucky is attracting extraordinary attention. Mr. Proctor says he met an English gentleman the other day who told him that in London investors were talking about Big Stone Gap, Cumberland Gap, Three Forks and Pineville, who could not tell for the life of them where such cities as New Orleans or Indianapolis were situated.—Courier-Journal.

The Busy Bee.

An humble boy with a bright tin pail Went singing merrily a town the dale, To where the cow with the brindle tail, On clover her appetite did regale.

An humble bee did gayly sail Far over the soft and shadowy vale; To where the boy with the bright tin pail Was milking the cow with the brindle tail.

The bee lit down on the cow's left ear; Her heels flew up through the air above; And through the boughs of a chestnut tree The boy soared into futurity. —Exchange.

Topographic Maps.

"Topography" is a word used sometimes in a broad sense to indicate a description of a place or region not very large, and sometimes in a more restricted or technical sense to mean simply the surface form, the ups and downs, the hills and hollows. In the early use of the term, its meaning was the general, unrestricted one. It is now used in both senses. If English catalogues of topographical books are examined they will be found to consist of lists of local town and county histories, local hand books, guide books, gazetteers, accounts of noted buildings and persons, and of events connected with local history. Maps or pictures may or may not accompany such topographical descriptions. This is the early English use of the word—a use which still survives.

Along with this early use of the word, large scale maps of limited areas were made—maps which exhibited the hedgerows and high-ways, the orchards and ditches, the parks and houses, the streams, stone walls, gardens; in brief, all the minor details of the landscape except the surface form. The features were exhibited usually by conventional signs, but the surface form was not revealed on these maps. The horizontal plan alone appeared. The element of relief was wanting. The scales of such maps, however, were so large that they permitted the exhibition of a large number of small features; and, as such, they were called "topographic," in distinction from "chorographic" maps, which, on smaller scales, embraced in one map a much wider field, from which all minor features had been of necessity excluded.—Science.

An Official Pencil Sharpener.

While your correspondent was talking to one of the clerks of the state department the other day, says a Washington letter to The Kansas City Journal, the gentleman in question touched an electric button and a swarthy messenger appeared at his elbow in a moment. Not a word was said, but the clerk, with a grand air, passed to the messenger a lead pencil the point of which had been dulled. The messenger bowed almost to the floor and vanished without a sound. In two minutes he again appeared, and with an obsequious salam he handed the newly sharpened Faber to the clerk, and again almost striking the floor with his head he departed without having a word passed between the two. That is one sample of the way in which the air in the diplomatic branch of the government affects an unsuspecting young man who is induced to accept a government salary for the service he performs there.

Jenkins.

The title "Jenkins," as applied to reporters, originated with the London Punch. Thackeray and others of the wits of forty years ago ridiculed the offensive and effusive details of personal and social affairs as published by "Jenkins" in The London Morning Chronicle.

The present population of Idaho is 100,000, and the property valuation $21,288,000. Mining is the principal industry, and the total mineral production for 1887 was $8,905,122.
