

THERE are nine hundred applications on file at Washington for appointments of Postoffice Inspector. Of course, there are no hungry Republicans in the country.

CLEVELAND is no longer in the White House, and the treasury-riders behind the Direct Tax Refunding bill are preparing already to push that measure through at the next session of Congress. But the Democrats will have something to say about it all the same.

THE contest for the Collectorship of this district is still unsettled and judging by the latest news some time will elapse before General Robinson's successor is named. Several of the faithful are after the position, but the correspondents at Washington City have from the first considered Captain M. C. Hutchins one of the most formidable aspirants, and in fact most likely to secure the "plum." While he is not of our political faith, yet he was born in Maysville and has spent his life among us, with the exception of the two and one-half years he was at the Ohio Wesleyan University and the four years he was in the military service; and if we must have a Republican Collector let it be the Captain. No one doubts that he is competent to fill the position, with credit to himself and the public service. Though a strong partisan, he is an amiable gentleman, sober and attentive to his duties, and in the public positions he has filled he has ever shown himself pleasant and courteous to all who had any official intercourse with him.

Full Returns Will Be Hunted After.

Returns of the 226th Grand Monthly Drawing of the Louisiana State Lottery Company on Tuesday, March 12, 1889. The record will interest many readers. It was also sold in twentieths at one dollar each; two to Denton S. Hamilton, Hamburg, N. J.; one to Henry Jessel, New York City; one to George Berehold, Chicago, Ill.; one to a depositor Union National Bank, New Orleans, La., etc. No. 39,823 drew the third capital prize of $50,000.

ABERDEEN.

Revival services still in progress at the M. E. Church.

The tan yard will lay up next week for repairs, which will take a week or so.

It is a kind of a push, dick-pull-devil affair. Future explanations are in order.

Mrs. O. F. Wilson and son, of Cincinnati, are the guests of Mr. and Mrs. E. R. Wilson.

"Backward turn, backward, time in your fight" - not exactly, but O'Harian is still Treasurer.

Miss Mary Waldron and Miss Lulu Wood left Monday to attend the Normal school at North Liberty, O.

Our popular boot and shoe man, Thomas K. Wit, was in Cincinnati this week replenishing his spring stock of goods.

It is said Brother Reeder occupied the floor at the meeting of the Township school Board Monday only one and a-half hours, in his celebrated stump speech.

The Captain and Lieutenant Schriver, of the Manchester Camp, Sons of Veterans, were visiting Captain Campbell, of Power Campbell camp, this place, Sunday.

Captain Linton's many friends will learn with regret that his condition is no better. He has been very ill for some time at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Galbraith, of Manchester.

Business change - Messrs. Walter and Frank Sibbald will take charge of the grocery of E. Garrison, having bought that gentleman out. They are clever, courteous gentlemen and will treat patrons right.

Conundrum - Why when selecting teachers for our schools can't some talent be employed? We have some excellent material from which to select - home folks who have spent time and money to fit themselves as teachers. Patronize home when possible is the maxim that makes business and cities out of towns. N. SPARKS.

OUR NEIGHBORS.

GERMANTOWN.

John Erion and wife, of Paris, are visiting his father and other relatives.

J. A. Watson, of the corner store, is in the city this week laying in his new spring stock.

Miss Katie Erwin, who was compelled to leave the academy of visitation at Maysville on account of failing health, has gone to Hamilton, O., on a visit to relatives.

ORANGEBURG.

T. J. Heffin has moved back to town again. Wm. Caivert set out 3.0 peach trees on his farm near here.

C. Coryell has set out an orchard of 500 peach trees this spring.

Miss Pearl Cooper is here visiting Miss Mary B. Ross this week.

Protracted meeting still in progress here, but no additional yet. There is a great interest manifested.

A good rain would be a great benefit now. It would help the wheat and grass amazingly. They need it.

John C. Everett, candidate for Assessor, was here Monday shaking hands with the people and distributing his cards.

Miss Alma Rigen, of Rectorville, is spending the week with the family of Dr. Ford, and attending the meeting.

Miss Phoebe Roe, of Maysville, was here Sunday visiting her grand-father, who has been very sick, but is some better.

C. Coryell and Frank Pollitt canvassed this precinct last week to see which was the lucky man and Pollitt won the prize, so we have only one candidate for Assessor from our precinct now.

MAY'S LICK.

A Pioneer Town in Kentucky When Lexington Was the Western Metropolis.

The Perils to Which the Early Settlers Were Exposed From the Indians.

[W. H. Perrin in Courier-Journal.]

An early town in Kentucky, and at one time quite a business point, was May's Lick, in what is now Mason County. When Lexington was the great metropolis of the West and center of the civilization this side of the Appalachian chain; when Louisville was only a fort, with a few cabins on Beargrass creek, May's Lick was a place of considerable importance - in fact, with few exceptions, the most important place in the county of Kentucky. But its greatness has almost faded from the minds of men. * * * It is twelve miles from Maysville, and dates its existence back to 1779. It was named for Captain John May, whose tragic death and the capture of his boat in 1790, on the Ohio river, by Indians, have been already given in these papers, and who owned the land on which the town was laid out, and a famous lick near by. It was on the buffalo trace from Maysville (Limestone) to the Lower Blue Lick, and was a famous camping ground in early times.

Many of the influential families, members of which have become eminent and great in the history of Kentucky, settled at May's Lick when they first came to the State. The fine spring and excellent water was inducement, and perhaps attracted them thither. Wells and cisterns are "modern inventions" that our pioneers knew nothing of, and as Kentucky had many fine springs, they became the sites of all the forts, block-houses, stations and early settlements. Among the early settlers there were the McLeans, one of whom - John McLean - was at one time Chief Justice of the United States; Desha, afterward Governor of the State; Daniel Drake and Waller, Dougherty, Hickson, Bassett, Lawson, Threlkeld, Glover, Caldwell, Johnson, Mitchell, most of whose names will be recognized as prominent in the State. The Shreves and Shotwells and several other old and prominent families who came to Louisville in its infancy, first settled at May's Lick. They were nearly all Baptists, and the first church in that section was built by them at May's Lick.

In the pioneer period of Kentucky, there was much annoyance to the people of May's Lick and vicinity by Indians. Although never besieged, or boldly attacked like Ruddle's or Lexington or Boonesboro, the savages committed many depredations and murdered many people. A few incidents will illustrate the perils and dangers to which the settlers in that section were exposed for years. An instance is as follows: In the spring of 1790, a company of emigrants sitting around their camp fire, a mile north of May's Lick, were fired on by Indians and one man killed. A woman's presence of mind saved the whole party from destruction. She jumped into one of the wagons, and with an ax, broke open a chest, got out the ammunition and distributed it to the men, calling on them to put out the camp fire and fight. This they did with a will, excepting a young man just married, who, in his fright, ran off to the village, leaving his young wife behind. There is no record that she was as courageous as she who, when asked by her husband if he might go to war, told him to go his country needed him, and she would rather live the widow of a brave man than the wife of a coward. But the valor of the men who stood their ground soon repulsed the savages and drove them away. Another instance, occurring near May's Lick, is thus recorded in the early history of the State: Two men named Hezekiah Wood and Lot Masters, went out one morning after the horses, which had been belted and turned out to graze. The Indians caught the horses, removed the bells, and by swinging them, decoyed the men away from the station where they killed and scalped them. It was in the summer season, and their bodies were not found until the turkey buzzards directed their friends to the spot where they had been murdered.

But the Indians often met the fate they designed for their white foes. So many horses were stolen from the settlers by the savages that every artifice that could be suggested or devised was resorted to by them to punish the red thieves. Rewards were offered, horrible as it may now seem to us, for Indian scalps, and more horrible still, a gallon of rum was the reward for a single scalp. The following is an instance: One night Robert McClure and two other men went out from Limestone with an old gray horse of little value, on which they put a bell, for the purpose of trapping Indian horse thieves. That the whites had no more scruples in taking the life of an Indian than that of a wolf or bear, is the fact that these men, as they went out to their "field of operations," agreed that if they found an Indian, they would shoot at different parts of the body, in order to know who was entitled to the gallon of rum. McClure was to shoot at the loins, one of the others, whose name was Cray, at the heart, and the third at the head. They had but a short time to wait after turning the belted horse loose, when a single Indian appeared, and, when sufficiently near, all three fired, then fearing that a large party might be concealed near by, the white men hurried off to the town or, rather, fort. A large foce went out to the place next morning and found the Indian badly wounded, but still living. He had received a shot in the loins, and had bled profusely. He was dispatched instantly and scalped, and McClure received his gallon of rum. This same McClure, upon another occasion, went out alone, taking a bell, and on arriving in dangerous grounds, rang the bell in imitation of a horse grazing, and then hid to which developments. In a little while he saw an Indian emerge from the thicket near his place of concealment, and peer about looking for the belted horse. McClure took deliberate aim and fired, killing the savage. He rushed to him, tore off his scalp and escaped to the station.

Mason County contained the first settlements in the northern part of the State. For many years Limestone was the great landing place for all Central Kentucky. Emigrants would come down the river in boats, land at Limestone and then proceed to the respective places of their choice to locate. Among the stations, forts and block-houses in the county up to 1783 were the following:

May's Lick, the first, and Simon Kenton's Station, in 1784; Limestone, in 1784; McKimley's block-house, 1785; Waring's, slide's and Lee's, the same year; John Kenton's, in 1786; Washington, in the same year; Mefford, in 1787; Lewis', in 1789; Bailey's Curtis' and Whaley's, in 1791, and Bosley's, in 1793. None of these, two or three excepted, were over ten miles from the present city of Maysville. Washington became the first town of all these stations. It is one of the oldest, if not the oldest, town in the State north of Lexington, and was established in 1878 by an act of the Virginia Legislature, having been laid off as a town the year before, the original plat comprising about 7.0 acres of land.
