reasonable terms that would insure continuous service. Labor organizations would do well to advocate the annual arranging of a scale of wages in all industrial circles.

CITIZEN SOLDIER IS SUFFICIENT. Army circles are active in advocating an increase of the regular army. It is claimed that the good work done at the Chicago strike shows the necessity of the army and opens a new field for its use.

From an army standpoint this argument is all right, but army officers should remember that they are not hunting Indians in this new field of labor, and that the American citizens they propose to go gunning for are a little on the shoot themselves.

Sincerely, there is no necessity for increasing the regular army, nor should such a movement be encouraged. Our state troops are sufficient for such emergencies as strikes and mob violence, and the only Federal soldiers really needed are enough to garrison our forts and keep the Indians in subjection.

Let it be remembered that the downfall of republics begins with an ambition to extend territory and increase military power. No republic can prosper that does not rely upon the patriotism of its citizens for support in times of need.

Look back on history for the cause of the decadence and downfall of republics and it will be found in every instance to have been a false ambition for military glory and conquest.

When the American people cannot, will not, or do not take care of their own affairs and preserve the public peace it will do to call upon regular soldiers and perhaps increase our army, but until that time it would be well for army officers to restrain their impatience and give vent to their warlike tendencies by fighting Indians and natural foes of the country.

Oh, certainly not! First Senator—Did you see that article about Senators speculating in sugar? Second Senator—Horrible! Yes.

He said; but she said, "I guess it isn't the state that's making the noise, but it's Ethel's bathing dress."

More or less. Jones—Poor Smith, I shall never see him more. Brown—You don't tell me that Smith is dead?

But it wasn't the Washington Team. Brown—This is the time of the year when everybody wants to move slowly. That's a way to keep cool. Just let everything wait until you can get around without hurrying.

It would seem that George Gould has not developed enough extra speed with the Vigilant to entitle him to any government bonus.

WASHINGTON congratulates itself that there was a good deal of business enterprise mixed with the Christian Endeavoring of our successful representatives at Cleveland.

The fact that St. Louis people are objecting to muddy drinking water is circumstantial evidence that they do sometimes drink water, after all.

Now that Prendergast is departed, the Philadelphia papers have very properly begun to discuss the question of his sanity.

It was a species of retributive justice yesterday when Farrell and Meekin, our former baseball lights, prevented the Washington team from downing the Giants.

On one occasion a member in fumbling among his papers, accidentally discharged his pistol, and the bullet went crashing through the desk in front of him, narrowly missing two or three Congressmen who were standing nearby.

On the occasion when Mills was making some peculiar and unexpected remarks, his Texas associate, sitting behind him, pulled out a blade six inches long, and stuck it in his back, saying, "Go on, Mills, I'm tired of you."
