Serve with sliced lemon.

The Times' Fashion Hints.

An evening dress pronounced one of the daintiest, is made like the picture.

It is of plain old rose silk, with garniture of velvet, chiffon, and lace. The velvet is laid on in narrow folds round the square neck, and has rosettes on each side in front. A belt with bows of the velvet ribbon. The large silk sleeves, caught with the rosettes, have a full delicate lace at the elbow, pretty appliques of the lace being also on the shoulders, and a full deep ruffle of old rose chiffon and velvet rosettes are on the skirt, which is made full in the back and just escapes the floor all round. The collar is dressed after the prevailing style, and is also garnished with a low of the velvet ribbon.

Buy New Style Shoes.

No woman is going to buy an old style shoe if she wants to feel that she is well dressed as other women. The fashionable boot and shoe is now made on a pointed last, with a straight tip. Common sense and round toe lasts are out of date, and so are the diamond tips. It doesn't cost much more to be in than to be out of fashion. The new style shoes are not uncomfortable, because of the narrowness of the toes, all shoes are worn at least one size larger than usual.

How to Squeeze a Lemon.

There are lemon squeezers and lemon squanders, but I wouldn't use one of them. Here, boy, show this gentleman to the sink department.

My Daughter's Address.

"Then I shall have my revenge." "How?" she laughed merrily. "By marrying the first girl I see dressed in it." "George, what a silly you are!" "I suppose so. Ten yards, you said, of the mauve? All right. There's the carriage." "That's better suited for dem-t-evening. I need time for afternoon and occasional Sunday wear." "George's eyes were still stuck to the light blue and rosebud sample." "I say, sis."

The handle at the top of a soup tureen is a group of three ducks with bills pointed to a common center, while a fourth reaches up his bill from the base. A vegetable dish is surmounted by a cork in the act of crowing, another is supported by two peacocks with drooping tails. Then there are small dragons and half-impossible creatures of various shapes and degrees of heinous ugliness. Evidently the divine Sarah has a horror of commonplace, always preferring to it the grotesque.

SHE SWAM FOR GLOVES.

A Young Woman Does Her Mile and a Half Without Trouble.

One of the fairest residents of White Bluff proved herself an admirable long-distance swimmer last Tuesday night, and in doing so wore a large box of gloves and one or two other things that delight the girl's heart. The young lady a few days ago was commenting upon her swimming abilities, when one of her friends suggested that she should not swim from the bathhouse in front of Mrs. Converse's to the bathhouse in front of the Heberlein residence, a distance of one and a half miles. She looked about her, and sixteenth of a second for the swimmer to accept, and preparations were made for the contest.

Wednesday evening was decided upon as the time for the swimming test, and all arrangements were made for it. A young man who is an excellent swimmer himself volunteered to swim beside the young lady, and a boat was also procured to be rowed along at a safe distance, so that if the party should give out in their bold undertaking they could be lifted into the boat and taken ashore.

The start was made about 8 o'clock on Tuesday evening. The news of the event had spread among the residents of White Bluff, and there was a good number of friends at the water's edge. The fair swimmer made a dive into the water and was off. With a steady overhand swimming stroke she propelled herself with ease and grace through the water. Her long hair floated about her head, and she looked as if she were a mermaid who had volunteered to go along and see that no harm came to her. The event was soon over. As the distance betwixt the young lady and the boat was lessened, she swam faster, and when some of the watchers thought the young lady should have been about starting out the race was over and she had won an easy victory.

To swim this distance and to do it with the rapidity with which she accomplished the feat, one must be perfectly at home in the water. Many persons of the male persuasion could not have done so well. The young man who volunteered to swim with her, and who was to be the time-keeper, did not attempt the task. By swimming with the old lady he showed herself to be the champion lady swimmer in or around Savannah.—Savannah News.

To Clean Black Dresses.

Here is a preparation which is excellent for cleaning soiled black dresses: Take two parts of soft water to one part of alcohol, or if you prefer, use pure spirits of turpentine. Mix the two, and pour a spoonful into the mixture, and rub a breath at a time on both sides, stretching the material on a table. Iron on the wrong side, and that which is to be ironed should be made up. Ironing with water, hot, but not scalding, before you iron. Iron while damp. This proceeding will make the material appear like new.

WHEN THE HAIR TURNS GRAY.

Hints as to Its Proper Care by One Who Claims to Know. Concerning gray hair there seems to be no rational theory for change in the color of the hair except that of loss of pigment-color and presence of gaseous matter in the hair shaft. This may be the result of natural or artificial causes. Probably among Americans the early age at which the hair becomes gray is due largely to nervous conditions. Mental and physical disturbances undoubtedly often affect the secreting apparatus of the hair, destroying coloring matter, for history records instances of the change of hair from dark to white in a single night through the cerebral excitement of some great loss, bodily or mental anguish, neither can coloring matter, once entirely destroyed, be restored.

Do not believe the quacks who pretend to restore gray hair to the youthful color in any other way than by dyeing, for science has not yet discovered a method by which pigment, once entirely exhausted, can be renewed. Dark hair may be bleached, but no sane person could be deceived by the dull, lusterless yellow of hair so treated, neither does dyeing deceive any one in good hands. One who would look clean with a head of white hair kept perfectly clean and fluffy with legitimate treatment, being disgusting when she resorts to such flagrant artificial means for keeping the hair dark or blonde.

When one's hair turns gray attention should be directed toward keeping it scrupulously clean, toward keeping the complexion delicate and fine with color, the eyes bright, and the expression animated, for a brilliant face, framed with snowy hair, has a peculiar charm, if the hair be abundant and becomingly arranged.—Detroit Free Press.

Beauty from a Paper Toy.

For the woman who wants to fill out the hollows of her face and neck and wants pink cheeks a good idea is to buy some of these pretty paper fishes or odd-shaped little bags to be found in the Japanese shops. If a woman will spend five minutes a day puffing one of these she will find her face filling out and the air which will be driven in and out of her lungs will increase the height of her chest and set the blood in circulation through the system, bringing a faint pinkish tinge to her cheeks. It will not be so pink as the kind that is bought in the drug stores, but the woman will be surprised in six months at the change in her looks.

"Are you in earnest, George?" she said. "I am," he said as solemn as if he were signing as pitcher for a baseball team. "What nonsense! Still I will get the address. I can manage it, I am sure." "How?" "That is my affair, isn't it?" "I suppose so," and he dropped the subject, sure it was in good hands. Two weeks went by and no allusion had been made to "my daughter's address," though it was by no means forgotten.

"George," said Margaret one Wednesday morning, "don't you think I'm in a very fine condition and need a change?" "Oh, yes, I suppose so," he answered, "six evenings and five dinner parties with the most elegant of a wife embarking on one's constitution." "That is just what I am thinking," she asserted, in a matter-of-fact tone. "So I'm going to Howell's Sanitarium for a week or two." "He lifted his eyebrows. "Why on earth to that prosy place?" "Oh, because. And you'll come down Saturday evening to spend Sunday, won't you?" "I fancy not. It's too dull."

"But, George, dear, there's a great deal of dress there—evening dress," she glanced at him quizzically. "Besides, I'll give you the whole of the morning's talk came back to her. "For some reason this plan did not seem to her to be her best. "I thought," he said, "you might get the daughter's address, you know, and—"

Margaret looked at her brother keenly for some time. "I'll do it," she said, "and I'll do it at once." It was just as she was about to deliver the package from Cooper's, Margrot sprung to open it. With a little cry of dismay she saw that the package was not hers. "What now?" "Why, isn't the mauve at all, but the blue and rosebud. I think you are dreadfully provoking." "George whistled a long note of surprise. "The mauve is the color," he said, "and sent you the daughter's address." "What daughter's?" "A nice elderly lady's. She was getting it at the same counter when I was getting yours." "It was a very intelligent 'ah.' " "How would it do," he ventured, "to get the address and send it right to the daughter's?" "His face colored slightly." "From here," "That wouldn't do at all," answered Margaret, "but never mind, I'll make it all right without bothering you any more. It shall go back to Cooper's in the morning, and of course the daughter's, who has minor, will return it to Cooper's, and they will send it to me at once."

"For some reason this plan did not seem to her to be her best. "I thought," he said, "you might get the daughter's address, you know, and—"
