PHILHARMONIC CONCERT. Miss Ellen Beach Yaw Has a Remarkable Voice of Wide Range and Flexibility—Other Soloists Pleased.

The first concert of the Philharmonic Club at Metropolitan Hall last evening was attended by a fashionable and enthusiastic audience of music-loving people, who were attracted by the extended program of that remarkable soprano, Miss Ellen Beach Yaw.

The first number of the program, Last Bohemian Nocturne No. 10, for piano, was ably well rendered by Miss Georgiella Lay, who was evidently not at her best in the rendition of this classic and artistic production.

In the succeeding numbers on the program, Miss Lay acquitted herself far more creditably, and her performance was well received by the audience.

She showed herself both skillful and artistic in accompanying the other soloists, and as soloist and accompanist was difficult and trying.

Miss Yaw, who was the star of the evening, came next on the program and sang a double number, an aria, the "Russian Nightingale," and a caprice Villanelle by Doll Aquas.

The next number was a concerto of three movements, all of which were sung in clear and bell-like tones. Her rendering of the "Russian Nightingale" aria was highly marred in several places by being out of tune.

The middle and lower range of Miss Yaw's voice is not entirely satisfactory because of a peculiar lack of brilliancy. As a concert singer Miss Yaw will always prove successful. She sings with ease, produces notes in abundance with facility and without strain.

Each number of the entire program was enthusiastically applauded and encored, and on the first appearance of the several artists presented by her were presented by appreciative admirers. The concert, on the whole, was very satisfactory and the Philharmonic Club is to be congratulated upon the opening of its season.

ILLNESS OF A JUROR. If Disappointed, Abridged, Who Expected Yesterday to be Acquitted. The trial of Frank Aldrich for forgery was interrupted yesterday by the sickness of A. George Johnson, one of the jurors.

GOOD SAMARITANS RESPOND Relief Furnished Some of the Sufferers Mentioned in "The Times."

ANGELS VISIT HER COTTAGE Several Pitiful Cases Illustrative of the Condition of Washington's Poor—Excellent Work Being Done for Suffering Humanity by the Associated Charities.

Relief is already being provided for the poor of Washington. The efforts that have been put forth during the present week in the columns of THE TIMES, to arouse the humane citizens of Washington to a sense of their duty in regard to the suffering poor, are meeting with ready responses.

One of the first cases relieved was that of the Irish woodworker, whose sad case was related in a Times reporter by Supt. Dunn, of the Municipal Lodging House. The poor fellow had trudged all over the city seeking employment of any kind, and had expressed his willingness to work for even $1 per day as a laborer in order to provide bread for his wife and children, whose cries of hunger were constantly ringing in his ears.

Another person who has reason to feel thankful for the publication in Wednesday's Times is Catherine Bell, the aged colored woman with three children, who were found destitute and suffering by the reporter in the small frame house, No. 1218 Delaware avenue southwest.

"Law, sir," she said to the reporter yesterday afternoon, "an angel has done come to see me since you was here the other night." As she spoke a smile of satisfaction and gratitude broke over her dark face, and a tear drop glistened in the corner of her eye.

"Oh, what a nice dinner we had that evening," she added. "It was the first square meal we had eaten for a long time. The provisions are nearly gone now, because, you know, there are four of us to be fed, but I am hoping for the best. You know, sir, the good book says, 'Some time or 'nother the Lord will provide,' and I believe he will."

It is understood that arrangements are being made to provide employment for George Lively, the white painter, of No. 115 O street southwest, who has long been out of employment and has a large family to support. Act. J. H. Smith, of the Fourth police precinct, says Mr. Lively is a worthy and industrious man and should be aided. He is nearly seventy years of age, but is always willing and ready to work.

A sad case of destitution and want was witnessed in the police court yesterday. Mary Hunt, a colored girl barely eighteen years of age, appeared with an infant less than one year old in her arms and asked Judge Kimball to send her to some place where she could find shelter and food for herself and infant. She said she was an orphan, and did not know who was the father of her child. The young mother was sick and half starved and the judge ordered that she be sent to the Freedmen's Hospital for treatment.

The bright-looking young lady in charge of the Associated Charities rooms on G street, near Ninth northwest, during the absence of Manager Emery, was seen by a Times reporter yesterday afternoon.

"We have just given temporary relief in a very worthy case," she said. "We cannot do much more as our funds are about out, but the case I mentioned was an emergency one, and we did the very best we could."

The case in question is that of a man who was injured by falling on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad tracks. As a result of the fall he became lame and a terrible ailment forced on his face, necessitating his going to a hospital. He has a wife and a large family of small children, and these were left entirely destitute during his enforced absence in that institution. He remained in the hospital three weeks and yesterday called at the Associated Charities' rooms. He did not ask for alms, but pleaded for work to relieve his suffering wife and little ones.

The bright and humane young lady clerk gave him immediate temporary relief, and she says she hopes he may soon get a position of some sort. The poor fellow said it was the first time in his life that he had ever become necessary for him to accept alms.

The Associated Charities are averaging from eight to ten calls a day. Some of the callers want money to pay their rent, as they are about to be put out on the street for non-payment. Others beg to be given employment of any kind, but the principal applications, especially during the recent cold snap, were for old clothing, children's garments being in greater demand than those for adults.

A number of women have been given sewing to do at their homes, by the donation and a portion of the rents of some have been paid in extreme cases. No clothing has been sent so far this season and the management of the Associated Charities has decided to cut-off garments to give away will send them to the rooms. Shoes are also said to be in great demand. In fact, anything that will help the needy will be thankfully received.

CAUSE OF CONNORS' DEATH. Coroner's Jury Say It Was Due to an Inferior Belt Buckle. An inquest was held at 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon at the Sixth precinct station-house over the remains of Thomas Connors, the telegraph lineman, who fell sixty feet to his death Wednesday afternoon, from a pole in the alley between F and G and Twelfth and Thirteenth streets northwest.

JOHN SHEA ON TRIAL. Charged with Keeping an Unlicensed Bar-room—If Convicted He Must Go to Jail.

The case against John Shea, charged with maintaining an unlicensed bar, was yesterday morning brought up in the police court for a jury trial. Shea only a few months ago was pardoned by the President while serving a term in the workhouse for a similar violation of law, and the case yesterday was alleged as the second offense for which he is imprisoned in jail.

Prosecuting Attorney Pugh called the case up, and Col. Christy and Lawyer O'Neill, attorneys for the defense, asked that the case go over, because they had not enough witnesses, but this Judge Miller declined to do, saying that he would give time for summoning additional witnesses.

Sergt. Daley was the first witness put upon the stand. He stated that on Sunday evening, September 16, about 8:30 o'clock he sent Eugene Mercer, a colored man, into Shea's grocery store, at 625 Maryland avenue southwest, with an empty bottle and a quarter to get some whisky. Mercer had previously been searched by witness and two colored men; no other bottle being found on his person. In addition Sergt. Daley's bottle was marked on the side and also on the cork for identification. In the course of five minutes the colored man came out of Shea's with the bottle full of whisky. On cross-examination Daley said that no conversation was had as to what remained Mercer was to receive for his work. The whisky was placed in evidence and passed around to the jury.

Eugene Mercer, the next witness, said that on Sunday, September 16, he went into Shea's place twice during the day. The first was at 1 o'clock in the afternoon, when he paid 5 cents for a wineglass of whisky, and the second was at 9 o'clock in the evening, when he bought a half-pint flask. Mrs. Shea had waited upon him both times and had gotten the liquor from a small sideboard in the dining-room.

Martha Brooker, a resident of Shea's court, was next called. She swore that she had also been in Shea's place and purchased whisky, but could not remember the exact name of the time. Margaret Lewis, another colored girl, testified that she had given money to a friend with instructions to buy some liquor at the store of the defendant, and he had returned with the desired fluid.

Sam Newton testified to having seen Mercer searched and corroborated Sergt. Daley's statements concerning the giving of the flask to Mercer.

At this point Lawyer Christie argued to the effect that the prisoner should not be held responsible for the crimes of his family, and asked that the decision of the case be wrested from the jury. Judge Miller overruled this, saying that the house was given to Shea and he was responsible for the character of the place. Shea was then placed on the stand. In the beginning of his testimony he denied the point blank that he had ever sold, allowed to be sold, or had any liquor for sale on the premises. He said that Mercer had never been to his house, and furthermore that he did not want him ever to come. He said Mercer was a pimp and frequented Kelly's, opposite to his, a very tough place. He also denied all the statements made by the witnesses for the prosecution.

The last witness called was Mrs. Marion Waters, daughter of the defendant and his next door neighbor. She denied that there was ever any beer sold, or any other liquor on the place. On September 6 a colored man who she knew as Eugene came into the private entrance of her father's place and asked for whisky. Her mother told her that she had had none to sell. He produced a bottle, but went away with it empty. Witness was positive that no liquor had been sold on the place since February 6.

This closed the testimony for the day, and the judge respite the jury until to-day for a further hearing of the case.

EXECUTOR OF AN EXECUTOR. His Liability the Subject of a Judicial Opinion by Judge Hagner.

In the estate of James M. Reynolds, Judge Hagner yesterday rendered an opinion regarding the liability of the executor of an executor.

John B. Reynolds was the executor of James M. Reynolds and had a residue of $18,825 in his hands. He stood in a peculiar position apparently to make an accounting, but the matter was left in an unsettled condition at his death, and his executor is now trying to make a satisfactory accounting.

It seems to have been claimed that some part of the estate of James M. Reynolds was acquired by indirect means, and the executor holds that he is not liable for such property; also that, as John Reynolds failed to account, the matter cannot now be revived against his executor.

Judge Hagner holds that property obtained by horse racing or gambling even must be accounted for the same as any other. He also decides that under two Maryland statutes, which apply in this case, the executor is liable for the waste of any estate of which his testator was executor.

CAPT. BRIAN SPHINX-LIKE. He Is Saying Nothing, but Attending to Business.

Capt. Henry T. Brian, foreman of the Public Printing Office, refuses to talk of the charges made against him recently by the Interstate Democratic Association. When a Times reporter called upon him he was suave as Chesterfield and uncommunicative as Gen. Grant.

HE HAS BRIGHT GREEN EYES. Mrs. Cecilia Bush's Life Made Breezy by the Monster of Jealousy.

The fact that Mrs. Cecilia Bush has a good-looking husband was one of the causes which conspired to make her a prisoner in the police court yesterday afternoon. She was charged with having assaulted Ella Dalney, a sixteen-year-old girl, on last Sunday evening, while the latter was on her way home from church with Mrs. Bush's husband and a freshly dressed young woman named Squire Ferris. The Dalney girl took the witness stand and told Judge Kimball that Mrs. Bush came up behind her and said: "You must stop running with my husband or I'll make you."
