PERFUMES AND SACCHETS. The Empress Josephine Liked Musk, but there's no accounting for Taste.

The French are renowned for their products in perfumery as well as those in the lines of silks and wines. The names of Lubin, of Fiver, and of Guerlain are famed throughout the habitable globe for their preparation of delicate odors in an infinite variety of forms.

war of 1870 the dressing-room of the suite she had been wont to occupy, and especially the drawers of the bureau she had used, were redolent of that odor.

Liquid perfumes have of late years been imparted largely by sachet powder, many women adopting the plan of securing small bags of the latter inside their gowns.

Yet they have never been able to create any perfume that will cope with two of the staple scents of commerce—the cologne water of Germany and the English lavender water.

The most potent of all perfumes, musk and starr of roses, are imported from the east, but are too powerful, especially the former, for European tastes at the present day.

Down to the epoch of the destruction of the palace of St. Cloud by fire during the sack made of cream satin. It is three inches wide and made with silk cord, which forms a loop at the open end.

The sides of the sachet are embroidered with a floral pattern, the petals being worked in narrow ribbon and the foliage in a deep shade of blue.

Only a Piece of Cloth. When I was on the detective force—at your way, my name is Jack Hindson, at your service—I had a case on my hands that baffled me.

I wanted to get on, for I was at that time engaged to Kitty Pease, and she had said that though she was fond of me, she did not mean to marry me until I had enough to marry on, which I should have as soon as I had found out the party who committed a certain murder.

Mrs. Jeffries, a rich, miserly sort of old lady, had been found dead in her bed, murdered by some one. No one knew who it was.

To be sure, the nephew would come in for her property, being her only relative; but though he had been to the door in the evening, he had been seen to leave away again, and no doors were found unlocked, and the servant had called for help before the bedroom door could be broken in.

The only clue I had was a bit of black cloth, clutched tight in the dead woman's hand—a fine bit of old black broadcloth torn in quite a singular shape.

A dismissed servant was a waiter, but I bribed myself into a chance of seeing his black coat off duty, and it had not been torn or patched.

I hunted up the nephew's boarding house, and got into his room under pretense of having been sent from the telegraph office to see the wires, but his clothes were all of thick, coarse cloth.

I talked these things all over to Kitty, and she set her wits to work to help me. She asked me to go to the old lady's house and show her the room she slept in; and she went out on the roof, as I had done many a time, and went along first in one direction and then in another, looking at all the egress doors, until I thought she would go off into the street; but she stopped at the last of the row and beckoned me. I hurried up.

"Close to the scuttle door lay a little black button." "This belongs to the garment the bit of cloth came from," she said. "There are black and black. This is a button that matches that black, not a brownish black, nor a foxy black, but a black that is almost invisible green. Do you know No. 100?"

"It's a very respectable first-class boarding-house," said I. "Will they take ladies," she asked. "If they are well introduced."

"I shall go there in a few days," she said. "Next day got a card from her—she hadn't been in the habit of having cards—wrote that address on it. I called. She came down to see me in her best black silk, with her bonnet and mantle on."

There was an old lady in the room. She introduced me to her, and then said she was ready. I took the hint. We went out together. "Of course you know why I came here," she said. "I'm spending all my salary and wearing my best clothes; but I've found something out already. Mrs. Jeffries' nephew calls on a young widow who lives in the upper front room. He has been engaged to her for some time."

"She paused a long time and then said: 'He was here the night of the murder.' 'Well!' I said. 'Has she left him out upon the roof?'"

"I wish you wouldn't ask me any questions," said Kitty. "I shall know before long. When I sent for you come at once. Will you let me have that bit of cloth?"

"It's more precious than diamonds," I said. Her answer was: "Yes, I know it." She put it into her pocketbook. "I have changed my room," she said. "I am next to her. There is a locked door between us. That is all; and I have made a peephole."

"Yesterday Jeffries called. I saw him come up the street, and hid behind a screen in the parlor. She came to him, and he talked like an innocent man."

"The poor old woman has done me another injury by getting herself murdered," he said. "I believe I'm suspected, because I shall profit by her death. Why, what do they take me for? I wonder who killed her. They say nothing was gone."

"Whoever it was, you ought to be thankful that the cracked creature is dead," she said. "Some common sense, of course. She'd scream and shriek if she saw one at her jewelry case and get herself killed."

NO PEACE FOR TRAMPS. Judge Kimball Reads a Severe Lecture to a Quartette of All-Around "Hobos."

Four soiled looking "hobos," who gave their names as Thomas and Arthur Robinson, Andrew and Mulroy McClernan, were charged with vagrancy by Mounted Police-constable Nobb in Judge Kimball's court yesterday.

It was brought out in testimony that the men had broken into a barn on the Bladensburg road and were snugly ensconced for the night when their slumbers were rudely disturbed by the policeman.

"How long have you been on the road?" "Since September 20," answered the leader of the quartette.

"What brought you to Washington?" "I am a bricklayer and came here to find employment. We went into the barn because it was cloudy and rainy."

"You will find," said Judge Kimball, "that the District of Columbia is a bad place in which to spend the night in any such manner as you have just described. In the future, you made a big mistake by coming here. In default of bonds each of you can go to the workhouse for thirty days."

Marriage Licenses. Licenses to marry were issued yesterday to the following: Thomas Lynn and Mary Charles, both of Montgomery county, Md. Charles A. Clark and Martha L. Milstead, Thomas W. Cardick, of Rockport, Ind., and Annie M. Varney, of Bangor, Me.; James O. Danroy and Lillie M. Purvis, both of Albemarle county, Va.; Charles Hall and Susie Phillips, Alfred M. Elwell, of Gloucester, Mass., and Josephine Parrello Davis, Wardsworth Cray, of Canada, and Marietta Green, of Philadelphia. Lucas E. Suit and Lottie M. Watson, Shirley George and Rebecca Simms, Pleasant Hills and Belle Finkler, Charles H. Smith, of Alexandria, and Zenobia Green, John H. Bradley, of Baltimore, and Annie O'Donnell, William Tillman and Maggie Hall, both of Gilesboro.

She was a fiend in female form, but she thought that had driven a woman to the gallows haunted me and sickened me of the detective business, which I left very soon. Kitty and I are keeping a little hotel now and prospering very well.—Tid-Bits
