It was a funny game, the first of the farrow series between Cleveland and Washington. This is said with a due appreciation of the meaning of the adjective. Were it not for the triteness of the observation, resort might be had to the title of one of Shakespeare's trifles in attempting a description of the game. Certainly there were errors both of omission and commission, and it was a comedy.

It is charitable to attribute the poor playing of both teams to the dreary, cheerless, error-inspiring weather conditions. Doubtless this had its effect on the players, but it was not the only cause of the failures. The grandstand and on the bleachers. For five innings the spectators had nothing to comfort them. There was not a play on the part of the Senators to warm their blood. On the other hand, the leads from Cleveland went right to work and made the Senators look like a lot of corner-lot amateurs.

This lasted for five innings. Then the men under La Chance's direction of the nation work of the local players and proceeded to go them one better. The result was that Washington won a game, not because of superior work, but purely on account of the stupidity of the Cleveland players.

La Chance, the big Gascon who is in charge of the Spiders in McAlleer's place, directed one of his most recently acquired "admirals" to proceed to the pitcher's box. Crystal was his name. Opposed to him was Willie Clegg, and as he was his last game everybody agreed that he was due for defeat yesterday. But Fate decreed otherwise, and although the little twirler did his best to circumvent the old dame, fortune was against him.

Manning, who was inspired by a wholesome respect for the young man (Crystal), for five innings they allowed him to repose in the box and looked upon him as a rare bit of cut glass that it would be disastrous to break or even disturb. But Crystal, it was discovered, was not the flawless piece of brilliance from which he takes his name. He was wild, wild at critical times, and the result was that the Senators took advantage of his weakness. Every now and then the young man would sail skyward and a Senator or two would walk to first. Sometimes these gifts resulted disastrously.

It was not until the sixth inning, however, that young Crystal failed entirely. Then it was hardly his fault. The score stood 8 to 2 in favor of the Spiders. It looked hopeless for Washington. But here where Crystal went to the relief of the Senators, Farrell, the first man up, was presented with base. Dungan popped up a little fly just out of reach of the fielders. Clarke sent a hot grounder past short, and Farrell scored. Grady was involved in the half over the fence, but he hit to Beck instead. "Germany" kindly fumbled it, and Grady was safe; so were the other runners. Luskey flew out to Beck.

Then Crystal showed his charity. He gave Connelly a base on balls, and Dungan was forced home. The germ of an idea penetrated the cranium of the big French first baseman. "He thee to the bench," said he to Crystal. Crystal was mad, but he went. La Chance hit the catcher Connor gracefully muffed that third strike and the ball went sailing toward the Cleveland players' bench. Grady crossed the plate and Carrick reached first base. McNeil gave Wilson four bad ones, and the bases were again full.

Johnny Farrell wore an air of supreme confidence as he approached the plate. One strike was called on the second baseman, and then with a mighty heaving of the ash he socked the leather and the ball there went sailing into left field. The three men on bases scampered home and Farrell chased to second. Washington had scored seven runs on three hits and won the game.

Both sides went out in order in the next inning, the seventh, but the sun, which had shown his welcome face for a few moments, sank to rest, which the grandstand and Umpire Hart said "game." Thus it was that Washington won another game.

In their first turn at the bat Cleveland was hit for three runs in an inning. In their first turn at the bat Cleveland was hit for three runs in an inning. In their first turn at the bat Cleveland was hit for three runs in an inning.

La Chance hit an easy one to Carrick, and the pitcher in an effort to cut off Donovan at third, threw wild and Donovan was safe. La Chance came home on McGuire's fly out to Luskey. The Spiders secured their last run in the sixth on Luskey's muffed ball. La Chance's drive for a base.

Washington scored one run in the first inning on Dungan's single to right and Clarke's long fly to Pickering. Another was tallied in the fifth on bases on balls to Grady and Cingman and Waldron's hit. Then came their seven runs in the sixth and victory.

Three new Cleveland players made their first appearance before a Washington audience. McGuire, the new shortstop, showed up in the field, and the crowd seemed to like his work. He was a failure at the bat. Donovan had little to do in right field, but managed to crack out a lone single. Despite his wildness, Crystal pitched a fair game and the Senators were unable to do much with his delivery when he located the plate. He seems to have the making of a good pitcher.

La Chance evidently desired to emphasize the fact that he is in charge of the team, for he wildly claimed after Hart had called his name that his club had won. He was unconvincingly convinced that it would not go to a victory for Cleveland and muttered something about some one having a swollen head. Maybe it was Manning. There were two games today, the first being called at 2:30. The score:

NATIONAL LEAGUE GAMES. HANDLED WITHOUT GLOVES. Champions Fall on the Cardinals and Hit Powell Hard. ST. LOUIS, Sept. 20.—Six hundred fans swarmed away as they watched the Cardinals give an exhibition of how not to play ball. Powell pitched the first five innings and was batted freely. Joyce then made his debut in the National League, making a favorable impression. His delivery puzzled the Brooklyn. Kison twirled an effective game for the visitors. The score:
