

EAGLE SCREAMS AT LEGION BANQUET

Veterans of the Union Talk Over War Days.

ARCHBISHOP IRELAND ELOQUENT

Chairman Calls American Flag the Property of Those Who Followed the Fortunes of Lincoln and Grant—General Miles Delivers Soldierly Address.

The American eagle screamed itself hoarse last night in the presence of past and present leaders of the military forces of the United States, when the order of the Loyalty Legion of the District of Columbia gave its twentieth annual banquet to distinguished sons of the nation.

Well-known commanders of the Federal armies in the war of 1861 gathered about the board, beside more humble followers of the flag, and listened with interest to patriotic addresses commemorative of the glory and valor of the American fighting man, delivered by the foremost orators and soldiers of the country.

Enthusiasm rampant. A blaze of enthusiasm extended throughout the gala-banqueted banquet room. Across the ceilings were draped in artistic designs the national colors. The immense hall of the National Rifle Army, in which the successful event was held, was banked with palms, and covered with bunting, and the entwined monogram of the order.

Gen. Nelson A. Miles, Archbishop Ireland, Senators and Representatives, and officers of the legion contributed speeches in honor of the occasion.

After an elaborate banquet the guests, with lighted cigars and wines, turned their attention to the spirit of the evening, and for several hours listened to the addresses of the orators.

Chaplain James H. Bradford invoked the blessing after which Brig. Gen. Ellis Spear, United States Volunteers, commander of the District Commandery, Military Order of the Legion, who presided, introduced the speakers.

Freedom His Theme.

Hon. Charles A. Proby, of the Interstate Commerce Commission, touched upon the theme, "American Liberty." Dr. Asa S. Fiske talked on the twentieth anniversary of the birth of the District of Columbia Commandery of the Loyalty Legion. He said a crisis had occurred in the history of the United States, the first of which produced Washington and the man of his stamp. The second crisis was in 1861. It brought forth Lincoln and Grant. The third crisis, he thought, occurred with the advent of the Spanish-American war—the 100 days' war, he called it—and is typified by McKinley.

Profound silence followed the mention of the name of the late President, which lasted for several seconds.

Makes Deep Appeal.

Archbishop Ireland made an appeal to the assembled veterans and their sons, pregnant with a deep meaning. His impassioned address was listened to intently. Among other things he said that had it not been for the old soldiers before him we would today, on the North American continent, have had a dozen struggling governments. "No war ever has, or ever will, in the history of the world, had the significance of your war," said the speaker.

Ohio's Steering Note.

Representative Jacob H. Bromwell of Ohio spoke of the prowess of the American arms. He was followed by Representative Littlefield of Maine, who made a stirring address. Ex-Senator Manderson of Nebraska spoke along the lines laid down by those who preceded him, while other distinguished orators responded to calls for speeches.

TEN TEN TEN TEN

The toast, "Our Deceased Companion," was drunk standing amid profound reverence. "Grant's Burial," original version written for the affair last night, was read by Cranston Kennedy, the author. The singing of patriotic songs, "The Star-Spangled Banner," "America," and "Marching Through Georgia," was a feature of the evening.

GOSSIP AND CHAT HEARD IN CAPITAL HOTEL LOBBIES

Back Among His Old Friends.

Hon. M. T. Stevens, of North Andover, Mass., former member of Congress and successful woolen manufacturer, stood in the lobby of the Arlington last evening and cordially greeted friends of the days when he was a Democratic Representative from the Bay State.

"I'm too young a man yet to retire from business, although," he said, "I have been some one persuaded him to admit his seventy-six years. In reality, I've turned the work over to my sons, but I am fond of going down to the office and seeing the wheels go round."

"Nor have I lost all interest in politics. It looks as though the Republicans had troubles of their own, doesn't it? Maybe the country will give the Democrats a chance, if the party in power gets in a very bad tangle. Certainly there are hopeful signs of returning unity in the elements of the Democracy, which have been discordant so long, and when the party stands together with its old-time firmness it is pretty apt to be victorious."

The Cloud on the Political Horizon.

"The real Democracy of Nebraska desires William J. Bryan," said Mr. T. S. Finley, of that State, in a brief talk at the Bigges House.

He repeated our way as a Populist, pure and simple, and we never expect to see him in command of the Democratic forces again. My own opinion is that the next movement which Mr. Bryan will head will be a crusade fraught with more danger to the country than was ever the silver cause.

Unless Senator Hanna and his coadjutors can succeed in establishing harmonious relations between capital and labor there is apt to spring up a political party of revolutionary tendencies—a party more radical and more to be feared than any this nation has ever known. There is no issue or scheme of politics so foolish or fanatical that it will not find leaders, if there be any hope of its getting control of the government, and would not be surprising to see some ambitious man like Bryan chosen its captain."

Passing of the American Bad Man.

"The centre of crime seems shifting to the East," remarked Capt. Seth Bullock, the noted officer and hunter of criminals, in conversation at the Shoreham. The remark was apropos of the daring escape and recapture of the Biddle desperadoes, whose performance at Pittsburgh reminded Captain Bullock of the old days in Montana and South Dakota, when he chased such hardened outlaws as Joel Collins, Sam Bass, and Jim Berry, who made a business of leaving stage coaches, and thought no more of killing a man who resisted a hold-up than they did of rolling a cigarette.

"The bad men are pretty nearly extinct in our country," he continued. "Most of them died with their boots on, and others were driven into Canada or Mexico. Perhaps the toughest of the lot was Sam Bass, who in his brief career perpetrated more petty crimes than any of his associates. Bass was a native of Michigan and went wrong while a mere youth. He started in a more of train and stagecoach robberies in the Northwest, and finally headed for Texas."

"His idea, so he afterward said, was to make one good haul in the Lone Star State and quit the robbing business, after escaping across the Rio Grande. "One bright spring morning in the spring of 1873, with three as fearless outlaws as himself, he rode into the small village of Round Rock, near Austin, for the purpose of confabulating the funds of the notorious bank of the place. Bass had dreamed that a detachment of Rangers—mounted police—had been on his trail for a week."

"Some one hour after the robber gang arrived in town the Rangers rose in likewise, but they didn't dream that the men they sought were so great at hand. The desperate fight that took place a little later was the result of an accidental collision between one of the ruffians and

Y. M. C. A. DEFEATED VORWARBERTS

Indecent Baltimore Indoor Baseball Team Met Its Match Here.

The Vorwarberts indoor baseball team came over from Baltimore last night with a great reputation for playing ability and a record that was unblemished. The combination would be hard to go up against ordinarily, but the local Y. M. C. A. has just such a reputation and record, and as a result a good hot game was expected, and it did occur. The Association won by the score of 6 to 5. The visitors brought with them some hundred odd rooters, and they were busy to the last ball tossed, but their efforts availed them little. By the end of the game of indoor ball ever played here, full of rattling fast plays and splendid hitting by both teams. The home team pulled off two lightning double plays and otherwise distinguished itself. It was Spear against Cuddy, two great catchers, and both seemed to play for the home team lashed safely five times oftener than the visitors, and made every hit count. On account of a questionable decision on a very fast play on the hit and run plan the visiting umpire was minus a job after the first inning.

Philadelphia Drops Three Games in the Bowling Series.

The Plate Printers' Bowling League continued its championship schedule last night on the Golden Eagles alleys with a set between the Philadelphia and Chicago teams. The latter won the full set of three games by fair margins. The players are gradually improving their work, and the scores made, while not very high, were of the steady sort. The scores:

THREE FOR FAT MEN'S CLUB.

Elks' Bowling Team, of Baltimore, No Match for Locals.

Unless the bowlers representing the Elks of Baltimore take on more avocations they cannot hope to come here and win from the bowlers of the Jolly Fat Men's Club. This they learned last night when nearing the end of the third game, which they saw, as they did the other two, slipping away from them forever. The visitors are jolly good fellows, but they were not in it last night with the "heavy weights," who in handy fashion took the first set of a series of inter-city games, and in the second bowled a 914 score, which set the visitors wondering, and so that it could be seen that we can bowl ordinary scores as well the locals dropped down to 709 in the last game.

Rodrick reached the 214 mark and Ludwig came second with 200. Laue bowled the first game, and then gave way to Armstrong, whose first low score prevented the team from reaching the 550 mark.

To partly console the visiting Elks for their score defeat, the Jolly Men entertained them after the games in the banquet hall with a generous repast, and with song and jest the time sped merrily along to train time.

A set of return games will be played in Baltimore the latter part of this month. The scores:

Fat Men's Club, Baltimore Elks, 998. 1st, 2d, 3d, 4th, 5th, 6th, 7th, 8th, 9th, 10th, 11th, 12th, 13th, 14th, 15th, 16th, 17th, 18th, 19th, 20th, 21st, 22nd, 23rd, 24th, 25th, 26th, 27th, 28th, 29th, 30th, 31st, 32nd, 33rd, 34th, 35th, 36th, 37th, 38th, 39th, 40th, 41st, 42nd, 43rd, 44th, 45th, 46th, 47th, 48th, 49th, 50th, 51st, 52nd, 53rd, 54th, 55th, 56th, 57th, 58th, 59th, 60th, 61st, 62nd, 63rd, 64th, 65th, 66th, 67th, 68th, 69th, 70th, 71st, 72nd, 73rd, 74th, 75th, 76th, 77th, 78th, 79th, 80th, 81st, 82nd, 83rd, 84th, 85th, 86th, 87th, 88th, 89th, 90th, 91st, 92nd, 93rd, 94th, 95th, 96th, 97th, 98th, 99th, 100th.

Former Terror of Evil Doers.

A man of figure so striking and physique so powerful as to attract general attention stood in the Shoreham office last evening and exchanged a few pleasantries with the proprietor, Mr. J. T. Devine, his old-time friend. The man was former Police Inspector Alexander S. Williams, now retired, but in his day, with possibly the single exception of Inspector Byrnes, he was the most widely respected and best liked of all the bluecoat officials of the metropolis. He was often depicted as a "clubber," and yet he wielded that terrible stick only on violators of the law and the best interests of the city.

As a police captain for years he was the terror of the evil doers of New York, and the workers of iniquity stood in mortal fear of him. In the night street car riots of that city he time and again demonstrated his utter fearlessness and ability to cope with the mob. "Cap" Williams, as he will be called by his dying day, came to Washington to see if he could ascertain any definite news of his son, who is serving in the Philippines, and reported wounded in a recent fight.

Arizona's Political Outlook.

"Although Arizona is Democratic now, I think it will elect Republican Senators when it becomes a State," said Judge Ainsworth, attorney general of Arizona, at the Arlington yesterday. "If this was generally known I believe that the prospect for an early fitting on of the mantle of statehood by Arizona would be brighter," he continued. "One thing that is delaying this great progressive step, which the people of the Territory have anxiously and justly desired for years, is the fact that the Republicans do not care to risk the increase of the minority in the Senate. The powerful influence in Arizona is the fact that while it is deemed desirable to have Democrats in the territorial offices, and especially that of the delegate to Congress, it would be considered wise for Arizona, if the State, to have Republican representation in Congress. I don't see what the dominant faith in Congress has to lose. Oklahoma and New Mexico, which will surely be admitted, are certain to be Republican. Thus the Republican majority in the Senate will gain four Senators, while only two will be added to the minority if Arizona should be Democratic, which I don't think it will be."
