Loftus' Players Will Have Their Last Game at the Park Against Strong Department Stars Today.

The Senators will play their final game at the American League Park this afternoon, when they will meet the strongest team that can be secured from among the different clubs of the Departmental

The game is looked forward to with not a little interest by persons who have the followed the work of the players of the several departments, as their admirers have steadily claimed that there are a pumber of men on these amateur teams that are strong enough to be in faster company. Today they will have their first chance to show what they can do when pitted against real ball players, although there are persons in Washing-Carr although there are persons in Washington who are cruel and uncharitable enough to allege that the Senators are Ely not real ball players, by any means.

However, the last game the Washington team of 1902 will ever play together will occur this afternoon and a large crowd will doubtless be on hand to give Loftus and his men a good send-off.

Rumors Are Numerous.

Already the rumor committees of the two leagues have settled down to business and there are enough stories affoat as to the make-up of the different teams of the rival organizations for next year to bewilder anyone that endeavors to get at the real condition of affairs.

It seems pretty certain that the National League people have singled out Ban Johnson and Charles Comiskey's Chicago American team to first attack by stealing their star players.

The fact that Second Baseman Mertes and Pitcher Platt have succumbed to the blandishments of the National agents is considered good evidence that the claims of the older league are more than mere puffs of heated atmosphere.

The National people announced that they were after the best men of the Ryan American organization and followed up their statement by pouncing upon two of Chicago's best players as an evidence of their good faith.

Now that the season of the American League is over and the players have nothing to fear by announcing their intentions for pext season, there will doubtless be found many deserters to the National League, while the Ameri- Carry cans will have to wait a week until the National season is ended before they desert the old crowd for the newer and more energetic organization.
