PANTS ARE LIKE MOLASSES

Thinner in hot weather and thicker in cold weather. Men are often mistaken in pants. Such mistakes are "breaches" of promise. When men wear pants it is singular; when they don't it is singular. When men go on a "tear" in their pants, it is all right; but when the pants go on a tear, it is all wrong. If you want to make your pants last, make your coat first. Another way to make your pants "last" is to buy them from the

was the most unfortunate part of an unfortunate career. His services to that country were never recognized. He returned to France never again to fight a battle. Retiring to the capital he played the role of a passive spectator during the French Revolution, dying in Paris on July 11, 1792.

Paul Jones has been called by his friends patriot, and by his enemies pirate. In reality he was neither. He was not one of those deeply ethical natures that subordinate personal glory and success to the common good. As an American he cannot be ranked with his great contemporaries, for his patriotism consisted merely in being fair and devoted to the side he had for the time espoused, rather than in quiet work as a citizen after the spectacular opportunity had passed. He was ready to serve wherever he saw the best chance for himself whether it was with the United States, Russia or France.

The deepest thing in his soul, the love of glory, rendered him, at once, incapable of meanness and true patriotism. Love of glory made him a lonely figure.

As far as his deeds are concerned Paul Jones appears a bold effective man, a desperate, successful fighter. He has been the hero of the novelists who have pictured him with essential truth. A popular hero, indeed, he was, and will remain so, justly, in the memory of men.

MR. BARROW ON RETURN OF CONFEDERATE FLAGS.

During the years 1861-5 inclusive the greatest civil strife known to men, was waged. The participants in this bloodiest of civil wars, were in some instances, brother against brother, father against son.

The men, who in many, if not the majority of cases were mere boys, were descendants of the Anglo-Saxons, who defied William, the Conqueror at Hastings and of "Scots wha hae Wallace bled." Men of such descent are known to be the sternest and fiercest of enemies and most affectionate of friends. Hence the bitterness of the great struggle between these men of the North and South. It is known that they are slow to forgive a wrong and this may be assigned as the reason why the conquerors, after that "war between the States" were cautious and reserved in giving the vanquished every liberty and failed to treat them as equals after the contest was over.

But time passed on, and after those terrible reconstruction days the feelings of hatred, if they may be called such, weakened on both sides until when President Grover Cleveland in a message to Congress, recommended the return of the old Confederate battle flags (which were held by the war department) to their respective states, there was scarcely any opposition forthcoming.

How could the people whose ancestors had defied the King of England in a just cause, continue to entertain thoughts of animosity among themselves for a cause which had been lost to one side and which time had shown was for the common good? The people of the South understood that they were to hold their places in the re-United States and they were not of a people who are treacherous because of defeat.

Hence the opposition which was brought against the resolution weak and came from an Ohio Senator, Mr. Foraker, who in his speech against it said that the North did not care for the flags, but that they should not be returned for the very reason that they should never have existed to represent a foolish cause. This speech did not express the sentiments of all the people by any means but the very fact that there was opposition to the measure was enough to deter Congress from passing the resolution.

Since the war the South has continued to prosper until today it is considered the richest and most successful part of the country. The free intermingling of the people of the once hostile sections has brought about a better understanding between them, and any unfriendly feeling which might have existed a few years ago has almost if not altogether vanished.

Knowing this we could not be surprised when President Theo. Roosevelt in a message to the Congress which met in 1905 recommended the return of the Confederate battle flags. The resolution passed without opposition and preparations were made at the capitols of the respective states for the reception of the flags.

At this date some of the flags have been returned and the others will be returned shortly. Those which have been received would have been wet with tears of the old veterans if they had been allowed to touch them. Chief among the agents which brought about this generous act of the President and of Congress was the work of the United Daughters of the Confederacy. This body of noble women was organized at New Orleans, La. in 1889, and since that time has endeavored to allay all feelings of unfriendliness.

This act of the President and Congress shows in itself that all feelings which should be unknown to brethren of a common government have disappeared. People who are of the same blood, own the same country, live in close communion with each other, and have convictions of the same kind can and should not allow thoughts of unfriendliness to exist between them. Thus acting on common impulse they have blotted out all such feelings, and the United States has returned to the States who fought for a lost cause the flags which were borne by their veterans in the struggle and which some of the veterans loved better than life itself.

This act of returning these scarred battle flags signifies the love which today exists among the citizens of this great country, and which cannot be expelled by a difference of opinion and struggle to uphold these opinions. It signifies that the people who

STEAMER DAVID WAS DOCKED

VESSEL WHICH WAS INJURED DISCHARGES CARGO AND WILL BE REPAIRED.

The American steamer David, owned by New York parties, was yesterday taken out on the Spanish dry dock at the Pensacola navy yard, where she will undergo a thorough examination and repairs to the hull made.

The vessel, which came here from Norfolk with a cargo of coal for the yard, went aground on the East coast in some rough weather and was badly damaged. In fact it was not thought at the time that she would be able to make port, but she did, although leaking badly, some of the plates being injured.

The vessel was libelled upon her arrival by the owners of a Jacksonville tug for salvage, and later gave bond in the sum of $15,000.

Afterwards the cargo was discharged, and yesterday she was taken into the dry dock for repairs. While the leak is not a bad one, it was necessary for the vessel to go into dock before she could proceed on her voyage.
