YOUNG WIFE SHOOT AND KILLS HUSBAND

him. She said it fired, she did not remember pulling the trigger or anything further than pointing it at him. She claimed that she had no idea of the moment had picked up the revolver. She thought it was unloaded, as it had been his custom to take out the cartridges each day.

Her statement was listened to with much interest. She did not vary upon cross questioning in the least, and stated that she would willingly give up her life to bring him back.

The Jury's Verdict.

After hearing the charge of Judge Landrum, the jury retired about 4 o'clock, and it was almost 8 at night before they returned. Their verdict was presented, and held Mrs. Turner upon the charge of manslaughter.

Bond was fixed at $2,000, and the defendant being unable to give this bond, was placed in jail. She appeared to be much affected, more so on the account of the death of her husband than from going to jail, which she did not seem to realize.

Both Well Known.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Turner were well known here. He came here several years ago, and was employed as a fireman by the Electric Light Company, with which company he worked up to a few months ago. When quarantine was ordered, he secured employment as one of the guards.

Mrs. Turner was employed, up to a few months ago, as a saleslady in the store of Kress & Co. She was popular with all the young people, being herself only about twenty years of age, and many extend their sympathy to her in her present trouble.

Scene of the Tragedy.

A Journal representative visited the scene of the tragedy shortly after the shooting. The interior of the house, which is a small three-room cottage at 407 North L. street was exactly as it was left when the young woman rushed from it after firing the fatal shot.

Mrs. Turner had been seated in the center room at the right side of the fireplace dressing her 4 months old baby and the washbowl was on another chair in front of her where she had evidently been bathing the infant.

From where she sat it was an easy matter to rise and reach the mantle over the fireplace for the revolver and then only partially turning, with the baby on her left arm, to fire at her husband who was evidently entering the door from the other room, back of and at her left.

The Autopsy.

The autopsy, which the jury desired to be held, was conducted by Dr. Hargis and Dr. Byrd. It revealed the fact that the bullet entered the neck exactly in medium line and about an inch below the Adam's apple. It passed directly through the wind pipe at apparently an exact right angle with that organ, but going a little to the left and making two holes in the trachea and lodging in the left side of the spinal vertebrae. The wound either in the windpipe or the spine would have caused death.

Married Only 14 Months.

The unfortunate young couple had been married only about 14 months. They were married on August 31, 1904. His full name was Francis M. Turner, Jr., and her maiden name was Mabel Irene Harris, a daughter of Wash Harris, who lives in the same neighborhood. He was a son of Rev. F. M. Turner, the traveling evangelist whom many Pensacolians will remember as having held services in a tent in this city about a year ago.

The Weapon.

The weapon used was a 38 calibre American Bull Dog, six shots, and all of the chambers were loaded except the one which had been fired. The revolver appeared to be an old one.

Grant and Lee at Appomattox.

In all the world's annals of heroic episodes there is nothing to excel the majestic grandeur of Lee, rising superior to adversity and defeat at Appomattox. It was the fitting epitome to a great career. And yet the commanding presence towers but little in the imagination above the grandeur of Grant's simplicity and unostentation when putting on the crown of a great victory. All things considered, measured by the influences of birth, training and associations of the two, his trial and test were as severe and he came out with as little taint of dejection and bearing as his great and illustrious adversary. Altogether the scene is a theme to be dwelt upon as the highest pinnacle of the excellence and superiority of American citizenship and character. It is one which may safely challenge comparison from all the nations of all the ages.—Vicksburg Herald.

The Barking Wolf.

The prairie wolf, the coyote of the Mexicans, is the American representative of the old world jackal. It is thirty-six to forty inches long, with a tail measuring sixteen to eighteen inches. Its color is usually a yellowish gray on the back and sides, with black cloudings. The under parts and inside of limbs are of a dirty white tint. The cry is a sort of snapping bark, and for this reason the animal is known as the barking wolf. It lives and breeds in burrows and has its young in April, often ten at a time. It hunts in packs and is very fleet.

SOLDIERS ON A HUNT FOR TWO PRISONERS

Over One Hundred Men from Barrancas Have Men Surrounded In Perdido Swamp.

Over one hundred artillerymen were on duty last night in an effort to capture two general prisoners, who escaped from Fort Barrancas during the night previous. The two men, both of whom were general prisoners in the guard house, escaped during Wednesday night, and were not reported missing until yesterday morning. One was under a sentence of two years and the other had been tried by court martial. Their names are Buckner and Wright.

When the fact was discovered that the men had broken through the guard house and escaped, there was much activity at the post among the officers and men. Dozens of artillerymen were detailed to go on the hunt and armed with rifles and revolvers they started their search.

Shortly afterwards the commanding officer telephoned to Sheriff Van Pelt, asking that an officer from the city come down with the sheriff's blood hounds and assist in the hunt. Dr. Sanders responded immediately and went to the post on a boat which was sent for him. This was late however, and nothing could be done for the night. The deputy returned and the sheriff went to the post to remain during the night, and at daybreak this morning will endeavor to pick up the trail of the prisoners and effect their capture.

The latest report last night from the post was that the prisoners were somewhere in the Perdido swamp, one of the most dense swamps in that section, and that a cordon of over one hundred men had been thrown around the place to prevent the escape of the men until this morning, when the blood hounds will be placed upon their trail.

To Remove Dust From Eye.

To remove a bit of dust from the eye, after all, an easy matter, though the greatest care should always be taken in so doing. If the dust lodges on the lower lid, press the eyelid, pulling it down and telling the victim to look up. This exposes the inner lid, and the dust can be removed upon a toothpick or hairpin, about the end of which a bit of cotton has been wound, to avoid a scratch or a bruise. If the upper lid is affected, take the eyelashes firmly between the forefinger and the thumb, ask the patient to look down and with a quick movement turn the eyelid over the point of a pencil or, better still, the edge of a card, which should be pressed against the eyelid just above the stiff part. This causes no pain, and the dust can be wiped off as from the lower lid.

A bit of steel is more difficult to remove. If a magnet is at hand, it is sometimes easily drawn out by the magnet's attraction. No particle of dust or steel should be allowed to remain in the eye. It is likely to cause serious inflammation, which may result in the loss of sight.

Why a Cemetery is So Called.

Webster says a cemetery is "a place where the dead bodies of human beings are buried." But that is all he says, and there is not a five-year-old child in the land that could not tell as much without referring to his Unabridged. In tracing the derivation of the word I find that the root is in an old Jewish word "caemeteria," a meaning dormitories or sleeping places. Later on the form of expression was changed to "requietorium." In that section of "Camden's Remains" which has the heading of "Concerning British Epitaphs" I find the following: "The place of burial was called by St. Paul 'semenatoria,' in the respect of a sure hope of a resurrection." The Greeks call it "caemeterion," which means "a sleeping place until the resurrection." The old Hebrew word for cemetery means "the house for the living," the idea being that death is only a protracted sleep that will terminate on the day that Gabriel blows his trumpet.—Exchange.

FOOD DOES IT

Curious How Right Food Rebuilds Body.

The benefits of the good, red blood made by Grape-Nuts food is described in a letter from Chicago:

"I was for years sadly afflicted with hemorrhoids caused by constipation, which was the result of impure blood supplied by food not adapted to the needs of the body under certain conditions. My trouble extended to rectal hemorrhoids which greatly reduced my strength. A surgical operation gave me no relief and I was compelled finally to quit business.

"Lucky, just when things were looking the blackest, some one recommended Grape-Nuts food as a desirable article of diet, and I began (Dec. 1903) its use, and in a few months brought my health back to me.

"The action of my bowels is free and regular, and this has brought relief from the hemorrhoids. At the same time a neurotic trouble which had been growing in me and which the doctors could never do anything with, has also disappeared. All this return to health I am free to say I owe to Grape-Nuts food." Name given by Postum Co., Battle, Mich. There's a reason.

DR. THAMES DIES OF YELLOW FEVER

Expired Last Night After an Illness of Only a Few Days.

Dr. Fowler Thames, a prominent dentist of the city, expired last night at 9:30 o'clock of yellow fever at his boarding house on Chasco street. He had been ill with the fever since about Saturday.

As soon as his attending physician arrived it was seen that the patient had a most malignant case of the fever, and every effort was made to save him, but without avail. He grew worse with each succeeding day and yesterday all hope of his recovery was abandoned.

In the forenoon the deceased realized his condition and although dying at that time wrote a most touching and affectionate letter to his mother. He realized he was going to die at that time.

Just before his death Dr. Thames softly sang "Home, Sweet Home," but this could not be heard except by those who were near to him.

Dr. Thames was about thirty-four years of age. He came to Pensacola and entered the active practice of his profession about four years since, and was one of the most efficient dentists in the city. He had a large number of friends and was universally popular.

The parents of the deceased, who reside in Greenville, Ala., have been notified of his death, and the body will be held here awaiting their instructions.

FISHSKIN LEATHER.

It is Made in Great Variety and is of Excellent Quality.

A great deal of good leather comes out of the sea—not the kind of leather that comes from the backs of walrus, seal and otter. Everybody knows about that. There is a queerer leather which comes from the bodies of fish. An extremely fine quality of green leather made in Turkey is manufactured from the skin of an ugly fish called the angelfish. This is a kind of shark—a shark with thick, winglelike fins that have earned for him the name of angel, though he does not look a bit like an angel, but rather the opposite.

The sword grips of the officers of the German army are made from shark leather too. They are beautiful in pattern, being marked with dark diamond shaped figures. This skin comes from a North sea shark known as the diamond shark. German leather manufacturers have tried to produce a leather from animal hides that shall supplant the skin, but in vain. Unlike animal leather, fish leather is absolutely impervious to water and never gets soggy from dampness; therefore it is ideal for sword grips, as no matter how much the hand may perspire, the grip remains hard and dry.

The sturgeon, despite his lumpy armor, furnishes a valuable and attractive leather. When the bony plates are taken off, their pattern remains on the skin, just as the pattern of alligator scales remains on alligator leather. The Pacific coast sturgeon and the sturgeon of the great lakes produce a tough leather belting that is used to make laces for joining leather belting for machinery, and the laces often outwear the belting.

The strange garfish, an American fresh water fish, with long, toothed jaws like those of the crocodile, has a skin that can be polished smooth until it has a finish like ivory. It makes beautiful jewel caskets and picture frames. The skin of the garfish used to be converted into armor by some tribes of American savages. The hide is so tough and hard that it makes a breastplate that can turn a knife or spear. Some of the finer specimens that have been found are hard enough to turn even a blow from a tomahawk.

The savages who wore this fish armor also used to wear a fish helmet. It was made from the skin of the prickly porcupine fish, and besides protecting the wearer's head it was used as a weapon of offense. The warriors hunted their enemies with it, and as it had hundreds of ironlike pikes the operation was eminently painful to the object of attack.

In Gloucester, the "king town" of fish, the humble cod has been utilized with success for making leather for shoes and gloves. In Egypt men walk on sandals made from the skins of Red sea fish. In Russia certain peasant costumes are beautifully trimmed with the skins of a fine food fish, the turbot. Bookbinders bind books with eelskin. The eelskin serves another and less pleasant purpose. It is braided into whips. The writer was the unhappy member of a European private school where one of these eelskin whips was a prominent instrument of discipline, and he has never cared for eels since then.

Along the big salmon rivers of Siberia the natives often wear brilliant leather garments dyed red and yellow. They are made from salmon skins. In Alaska beautiful waterproof bags are made from all sorts of fishskins.

The queerest use is that to which the intestines of the sea lion are put. They are slit and stitched together to form hooded coats, which are superior to india rubber as waterproof garments. Walrus intestines are made into sails for boats by the Eskimos of northwestern America.—Canadian Harness and Carriage Journal.

The mean time for twelve runs over the course is 18.92 knots per hour.

How to Rule a Husband.
When the writer was about to marry, the wife of a well known judge gave her this advice:
"My dear, a woman needs the wisdom of Solomon, the patience of Job and the meekness of a dove to get along with the best man that ever lived. I have my third husband, all good men, but all cranky at times. When they are cranky, keep still; when they fret, hold your tongue, and always remember that it takes two to make a quarrel."

The First Umbrellas.
Those who suppose that the umbrella is a modern contrivance will be surprised to learn that umbrellas may be found sculptured on some of the Egyptian monuments and on the Nineveh ruins. That umbrellas bearing a close resemblance to those of today were in use long before the Christian era is shown by their representation in the designs on ancient Greek vases. The umbrella made its first appearance in London about the middle of the eighteenth century, when one Jonas Hanway, it is said, thus protected himself from the weather at the cost of much ridicule.—Harper's Weekly.

HERPICIDE'S MISSION.
It Takes Away the Dread of Birthdays.
Nothing is more annoying to men and women of middle age than to see those unmistakable signs of age—thin hair and grayness—approaching. But science has discovered that these conditions are no longer, "unmistakably" evidences of old age, for the dandruff theory proves that even very young people may suffer hair loss, while those fortunate enough to escape the ravages of the scalp germ, retain their abundant locks to a ripe old age. Newbro's Herpicide kills the dandruff germ and removes the risk of appearing old before your time. Save your hair and your feelings, by using the genuine Herpicide. For sale by W. A.
