THE CONTEST OF MR. HEARST

Recount Does Not Show What the Public Expected.

UNDER PRESENT RATIO OF GAINS MR. HEARST WILL FALL FAR SHORT OF GETTING ENOUGH TO ELECT HIM.

The New Orleans Times-Democrat says: The recount in the Hearst-McClellan race for the New York mayoralty draws its slow length along with tiresomely few changes in the totals of the boxes opened.

At noon yesterday 464 boxes had been recounted, and Mr. Hearst's net gain amounted to only 218. There were still 1484 boxes to be opened, but at the present rate of his gains, the contestant will fall considerably short of over-coming Mayor McClellan's majority of 3474. At the beginning of the count, it looked for a time as though Mr. Hearst might win. Returns from the first few boxes opened were encouraging to his friends. Latterly, however, the changes have been small and unimportant, and sometimes they have been made in favor of the mayor.

For instance, in the fifty-four boxes opened and counted last Monday, Mr. Hearst's net gain was only ten. Of the seventy-four boxes counted up to the noon recess yesterday, he gained in the net only thirty. Monday's recount made no change whatever in twenty-three of the fifty-four boxes. In fourteen of them the changes favored the mayor, while in the remaining seventeen the contestant gained slightly. The largest change in any single box on that day was six votes.

So far as the recount has gone, it is apparent that the charges of wholesale manipulation of returns by the canvassers or election officers have been without foundation. The insignificant changes shown are clearly attributable to errors on the part of the officials or to variance in interpretation of the markings, such as is entirely natural and frequently developed in any election contest. The showing that the errors have at times favored one side a little and at times given the other a slight advantage, clearly indicates that the election officers made no effort to "throw" the election by tinkering the returns.

McClellan's Foolish Course. Unless some radical and unexpected change is effected by recount of the remaining boxes, the result is clearly foreshadowed. It is not what the Hearst people expected, nor what the public had been led to expect, but it is rather gratifying to know that charges affecting the integrity of this election in the city's largest municipality have been proven unfounded, and a distinct relief to know that the long contest has been unfortunate, if not foolish. The persistent attempt to obstruct or stave off the recount naturally roused the suspicion in many minds that Mr. Hearst might have been counted out and that the mayor was fearful of the result of a recount. If Mr. McClellan and his friends had consented to the contest instead of opposing it and had hastened the recount instead of delaying it for years, they would have earned the applause of a people who love fair play and a square deal, instead of rousing sympathy for their antagonist and a vague suspicion that something really was wrong. Incidentally, they might have prevented

MORNING GOWN FOR YOUNG GIRL.

The illustration shows a good model for a linen, chambray or pongee gown for a young girl. The original gown from which the sketch was made was of pale pink linen, with a detachable guimpe of embroidered mulle. The bodice was laid in stitched plaits, and the little revers on either side of the front plait were braided at the edges with white and pink soutache. Small buttons of pink linen embroidered in white were also used.
