TERSELY TOLD.

Many people are looking for furnished and unfurnished rooms, and it stands to reason that those who have them for rent could easily find occupants by advertising. The Journal's want ads are read extensively every day and they seldom fail to accomplish their purpose. These ads are inexpensive. Four lines will cost 25 cents for the first insertion and five cents per day for subsequent insertions, making 50c for one week or $1.50 per month, cash in advance.

The maximum temperature at Pensacola yesterday was 87 degrees at 10:10 a. m., while the minimum was 76 degrees at 4 a. m. Last year on the same date the maximum was 85 degrees and the minimum 74 degrees. The average maximum for this date is 88 degrees and the average minimum 76 degrees.

Twenty-one cases were docketed for trial yesterday morning in the recorder's court. Of this number one case was continued, one not prosessed, and fines amounting to $128 imposed.

Stories of the Streets and Town

A wide field is the microbe's boast. He is our country's bane. He does his stunts from coast to coast From Florida ptomaine.

He was a grand old fellow, with his bluff and eccentric ways, his keen insight into the innermost recesses of your soul, and the brief flashes in his conversational moods that brought you back to fifty years ago, when men had simple tastes and sweet faced women spun at their whirring wheels, in the calm of secluded homes.

Old "Uncle Tom," as he had come to be familiarly known, through an intimate association with the young men and women with whom he had been surrounded in the large newspaper office where he wove his freshening nature touches, his calm judgment of the world and men into sentiment which brightened its pages and made you better for the reading, was one of nature's own.

Why that prudent dame had ever allowed him to stray into the grind and the blind of a round of duties on a metropolitan paper was a mystery hard to solve.

He scouted, vehemently, and in his own quaint way, the overtures of man, who in his declared "rank artificiality" of the day had filled his offices with implements which he considered an insult to the days and the ways that had gone, and a time when men had depended upon themselves alone in the accomplishment of their ends.

The typewriter he considered an abomination, which he utterly refused to accept.

Adding machines were a source of unending and scathing reproach on his part, and a mechanical stand in which reposed the office copy of "Webster's Unabridged" proved the last straw in the preservation of the old man's patience.

One day he strolled away. Not believing in the inauguration of train service as a mode of latter day locomotion, he had walked far into the depths of the cool wooded homes of the birds and the flowers he loved with a passion untamed, when the last rays of the setting sun warned him of duties which waited in town, and of the night's work before him.

The night breezes sighed through the splendid pines, and a tiny feathered creature perched its head knowingly from an adjoining bough, then flew straight to the hand of the man whom instinct had already taught it to trust.

A fierce, throbbing, restless resolve had burned itself into the heart of the primitive man as he stood in his own domain, and before he could withstand the witchery of it all, he had laid himself down on the earth which he loved, and with nature caressing and crooning him softly to sleep, he sighed in his dreamy contentment.

The "boss" had grown restless and apprehensive. Had "Uncle Tom" gone off on another of his particular "periods," he wondered, and, if so, when would he be likely to return?

The beauty of the old man's style, the strength of his unworried logic, and the real value of the stuff that he submitted had caused him before this to extend considerable latitude in instances like the present.

Finally the postman brought a letter. He brightened. It was in the peculiar old school hand of "Uncle Tom." It read:

"After having visited the country once more, and slept a whole night out under the trees, I feel that I am utterly and forever incapacitated for further duty on a metropolitan newspaper, where men think on machines, and you have to be a full-fledged union mechanic to get into the dictionary."

The boss sighed with the regret that he felt, but a light, half tender, and all-understanding, shone in his eyes.

(With apologies to George Ade.)
Once upon a time, there were two men. One was a Wise Guy with a good stock of bluff always on hand, and the other one Squinted and wore huge Bald Spots on the top of his Head.

The Squint was caused by working overtime under the office light, for he was an Ambitious Cuss and wanted to be one of the Shiners.

The Wise One took life easy. He generally knew a Good Thing when he saw it, and Held On. A Good Thing with him didn't make a noise like Hard Work, and he rolled along like the successful Tin Horn that he was.

Yes, Agnes, he had a Dead Game Lead ripe Cinch on life, and he ran with the Upper Crust.

When the man with the bald spots was making a Home Run up a deserted Short Cut on his way home to his wife, after a grind at the office downtown, the Man Who Knew a Good Thing was out with the Boys, chasing Highballs and indulging in other Injurious Exercise.

Finally the Squint died out of the Other Fellow's eyes for good. They put him, bald spots and all, in the hands of the Undertaker, and the Doctor called around for his fee for the good work done.

He had worked Too Hard, so people said, and his Wife began taking in Sewing.

Meanwhile the Other Man got his job. He didn't have to work, but he thought he would, and grace the Landscape with his Presence a while.

When people saw the Wise Guy Making Good where the Dear Departed had passed in his Checks, they shook their heads and marveled at the difference in the Running Gear of the Two Men.

"He had too many Irons in the Fire," they decided finally, and the case of Squints went down in the Book as the Sad Result of Getting There Too Fast.

"Anyhow," they said to themselves, "It's a Wise Guy who doesn't Monkey with his own Destiny!"

Thinks It Saved His Life.
Lester M. Nelson, of Naples, Maine, says in a recent letter: "I have used Dr. King's New Discovery many years, for coughs and colds, and I think it saved my life. I have found it a reliable remedy for throat and lung complaints, and would no more be without a bottle than I would be without food." For nearly forty years New Discovery has stood at the head of throat and lung remedies. As a preventive of pneumonia, and healer of weak lungs it has no equal. # ADVERTISING PROPOSITION

Chamber of Commerce Called to Consider One This Afternoon.

A special meeting of the Chamber of Commerce has been called for 6:15 o'clock this afternoon at the request of the chamber's committee on advertising to discuss and act on a proposition made by Wm. T. Blaine for a write-up of Pensacola and this immediate section as part of a special Florida section for publication simultaneously in seven northern, eastern and western newspapers on Sunday, December 6.

The salient points of the proposition are as follows:

Salient Points.
The writing will be done by persons selected by the various institutions paying for the articles, which will be in the form of illustrated news matter. The matter will be printed simultaneously in the Boston Post, New York American, Philadelphia Record, Pittsburgh Press, Cincinnati Enquirer and the Sunday and Weekly Inter-Ocean of Chicago, with an aggregate circulation of 1,761,000 over the territory from Maine to Dakota.

The National Association of Advertisers estimate that the advertising of a newspaper are five times the number of papers circulated. Mr. Blaine, however, claims three, instead of five, and thus figures a reading circulation of 5,283,000 who would be reached by such a publication as he proposes.

The regular rates for such reading matter vary among the papers named from $225 to $675 a column, and he offers the space at $1,000 a column, or an average of $150 per column per paper.

The directors of the Chamber of Commerce gave Mr. Blaine an audience Tuesday afternoon and sent the matter to the advertising committee, for that committee to investigate it more closely and, if the committee found the project sufficiently practical, to call a special meeting of the chamber to act on the proposition.

The committee met yesterday morning, endorsed the project, but, doubtful of raising enough money for a big space and undecided as to the relative value of using a column or so, referred the matter as endorsed without recommendation to a special meeting for final action, and requested that President Younge call the meeting for this afternoon at 6:15.

NEGROES OF FLORIDA ARE FOR BRYAN

Lake City Negro Preacher Says His Race is Lining Up For Nebraskan.

A Lake City dispatch to the Jacksonville Metropolis says: Rev. G. B. Wilson, pastor of Mount Pisgah African Methodist church, on Sunday addressed his congregation, consisting of 500 parishioners, from the subject, "What shall the harvest be?" and paid a glowing tribute to the Rev. J. Milton Waldron, of Washington, D. C., and commended the work that is being done in the national campaign by the leaders of the colored race. He said, in part, that the recent articles in the evening Metropolis have caused very wide comment upon the stand that Waldron has taken in supporting the election of W. J. Bryan, the democratic candidate for president.

"My personal knowledge," said he, "and experience with Dr. Waldron in political campaigns in the city of Jacksonville, where I was associated with him as one of the workers of that city for two years, makes me regard him as one of the most wide-awake, energetic preachers in the race. He is a model Christian and a deep thinker, and is deeply interested in the negro's future political career in America."

"Many of you have asked me to give my opinion regarding Mr. Waldron and his campaign. Rev. F. H. Robinson, an English clergyman, once said that political science was the highest education that the human mind could attain, but such an education cannot be appreciated by that class of negro men who will thank God each day that they are not like Mr. Waldron. The politician is unlike the statesman; he will pipe any tune to which the people will dance, while the object of the statesman is to promote great policies for the good of all the people. Like Mr. Waldron, I think well of Mr. Bryan's policies. I regard him as one of the greatest statesmen on the face of the earth. Three times has the republican national convention laid equal rights planks to catch our votes, and neither time has the speaker's gavel in congress driven a nail in that equal rights plank."

"Mr. Bryan and the democratic party, for the first time since 1865, have laid an equal rights plank. I believe that every man at Denver, Colo., who voted for that plank was just as sincere as the impregnable walls of Gibraltar. The many unkept promises made by people by the republican party causes me to believe that they are insincere. The election of Mr. Bryan, says Mr. Waldron, means the salvation of the race in politics. I believe it is true. I believe that if he is elected, and the negroes assist in his election, that the harvest will be great; that every southern state will keep its pledge, and that the legislatures will so amend their constitutions as to give all the American citizens equal rights. The federal government cannot prevent any state from enacting laws to regulate internal affairs."

"Our leaders have often led our people to antagonize the white man, on whose farm he lives, or whose house he rents, with a cry that 'I am a republican,' because the republican party set the negro free. If that be true we have long since paid the debt. More than eight millions of our people live in states where democracy rules. Christ said, 'Whoever would have friends must first show himself friendly,' and if the negro shows himself friendly to the white people among whom he lives he will have friends among them. I was born in the south, lived in the north, and, like Mr. Waldron, as a negro I have more confidence in the friendship of the southern white men than I have in the northern white men, with all of their republicanisms."

RESULTED IN A DRAW.
Dungarvan, Aug. 19.—The weight contest held here yesterday between Martin J. Sheridan of the Irish-American Athletic Club and Thomas P. Kieley, the Irish jumper and weight thrower, for the championship of Ireland, resulted in a draw. Kieley won the hammer throw and the 5-pound weight event, while Sheridan won the 16-pound shot put and the 25-pound weight event.

MISSISSIPPIAN IS HIGHLY HONORED

Columbus Boy Carries Off Highest Honors at Oxford.

Special to The Journal.
Columbia, Miss., Aug. 19.—It was with general rejoicing and genuine happiness the people of this city and section received the glad news from London, England, that Edwin Ford, of this city, carried off the highest honors in the final examinations at Oxford.

This exceptional honor was won by Ford in an competition with students representing the twenty-six colleges composing Oxford University. In a word, he has shown his superior mental attainments over fully five thousand students gathered in the great British institution of learning from all parts of the world.

Ford is a mere boy, having won the Rhodes scholarship for Mississippi at an examination held in Jackson three years ago. At that time he was barely sixteen years of age, and his remarkable showing, following so closely on the heels of the great triumphs of the American athletes in the Olympic

80 PER CENT. OF MINES ARE IDLE
By Associated Press.
Pittsburg, Aug. 19.—Eighty per cent of the coal mines along the Monogahela river are idle and thousands of miners are out of employment as a result of the low water from the Ohio river.

Practically all the coal from this district is shipped by river, but for several weeks the water has been so low no shipment could be made. The consequence is that every barge is loaded with coal awaiting shipments and no more coal can be mined until empty barges are received to store it in. The situation is said to be the worst in recent years and unless there is sufficient rain to raise the river enforced idleness will cause much suffering among the miners.

THE WEEKLY JOURNAL IS ISSUED TOMORROW!

The firm who would like to enjoy the patronage of the man out of town, should carry an ad. in The Weekly Journal. The rate is low enough and the circulation of the WEEKLY, although less than half the size of that of the Daily Journal, is still larger than the circulation of all the papers in West Florida put together. Think of that!
