ESCAMBIA COUNTY'S NEW JAIL BUILDING

Through the courtesy of W. J. Roberts, the custodian, a representative of The Journal, was shown through the new county building this week, that the readers of this paper might be informed as to some of the interesting structural details of the splendid temple of justice which stands at the corner of Jefferson and Zarragossa streets. The examination was made in detail from cellar to garret, from a coal chute to sheriff's office, from the handsome appointed court room to the grim cell in which condemned murderers will wait their doom.

It may be safely stated that with the exception of certain details which have not yet been completed, owing to circumstances which it will profit nothing to discuss here, the building stands as one of the most modern and completely equipped for the purpose for which it was erected of any county building in the country. The plan seems to have taken into account every need which might arise, and the structure will be adequate for the needs of the county for decades to come. There is not only every provision for keeping folks in, when they have been once incarcerated, but who might desire to enter for any purpose not sanctioned by law.

The Building is Twins.
The building, while to outward seeming a single structure, is in reality twins. On the north of the great four-inch oak doors of the, at present, unused main entrance is the court wing, to the south the jail wing, the cells, hospital wards, kitchen, sheriff's office etc., being in the latter wing.

The northeast entrance of the court wing, immediately adjoining the coal chute, which, by the way, will accommodate a carload of coal at a clip, leads into a corridor, the right of which is the office of the clerk of the court of records. This is a handsome room, finished in white and furnished with a complete set of steel furnishings, counter, filing cabinets, table, desk, etc., all finished in an imitation mahogany that would take a wood wizard to discover as an imitation. The purpose throughout the entire building as exemplified in the clerk's office, was to make the structure absolutely fireproof—hence the steel furniture. The vault, opening from the office, is large and well lighted, and is supplied with a set of steel filing cabinets and steel roller shelves, in which and upon which are kept the papers and books of the office.

West of the clerk's office, and with its main entrance at the northwest corner of the building, is the court room of the court of record. This is an interesting feature of the new building. It was formerly necessary to convey the prisoners, in gangs, chained together, from the court house to the court room, a distance of several blocks, to the court room. This is obviated in the new hall of justice. A door leads from the court room to the light well in the center of the building, and directly opposite is a door from the corridor of the jail. Across the "Bridge of Sighs," the prisoners are led to the court room, without passing out of the building.

The Court Room.
The court is a handsome room finished in white, furnished with steel desks and tables, and provided with six comfortable jury chairs. In the portion of the room set apart for the spectators are 135 handsome opera chairs. A gallery extends around three sides of the room, the back part of which is intended to fit up for the use of ladies. This adjoins the rest room for white ladies on the second floor.

The light fixtures and other furnishings of the court room are the very finest, and would be creditable to any city. The whole room, in fact, is notably different from the dingy, cobweb laden rooms which are so frequently used by courts.

On the second floor of the court wing, at the east end, are two well-lighted jury rooms, provided with chairs, table and toilet.

West of these rooms is the office occupied by Judge Egges, of the court of record. This is a suite of two rooms, an entry and a private office, provided with steel furniture, bookcases, etc., an exceedingly comfortable office.

At the west end of the court wing is the office of Scott M. Loftin, the county solicitor. This is the only office, the walls of which have been finished.

With the exception of the clerk's office, which has the hard white finish, the walls were left rough, to be tinted. Solicitor Loftin has finished his office himself, and it indicates how handsome the whole interior will be when completed according to the plans. The walls are a light brown. This is one of the finest offices in the building, with large windows opening on two sides.

On the third floor at the west end, is the set of offices intended for the district attorney. He, however, has private offices elsewhere, and the rooms are occupied by Justice of the Peace Nickelson, for office and court room. Adjoining him is the office of Probation Officer Paulsen, who says he has the best office in the building.

Four other rooms lie along the corridor on this floor, but are not at present occupied, with the exception of the large room at the east end, planned as a court room for the justice of the peace, but which is now used by the family of the jailer.

Marble stairs lead from the first to the second floors of the court wing, and concrete stairs to the third floor. Throughout the entire court wing a unified system of locks is installed, one master key opening any door in this part of the building.

The Jail Wing.
Across the light well from the court wing lies the most interesting, if not the most attractive, part of the county building. It is the jail wing—where the jangle of discordant voices, complaining always, rings continuously down the long corridors; where inmates are seen through the bars of some mahogany doors the clang of steel restraints; where men and women may not come and go at their own sweet will, but where those who have no business within are shut out by impassable barriers, and where those who are within can only come out at the beck and call of other people.

The interior of the jail wing is not beautiful. Marble halls and oaken doors would make a jail beautiful, but certainly bare concrete walls and cells of thick steel bars cannot. The jail wing has, however, a quality which is a commendable one in such a structure. It is substantial. It looks almost like the "immovable body" of the famous foolish question, with its twelve-inch reinforced concrete walls and its thousands of tons of steel work.

People who have wondered why the county building cost so much will find much of the answer in the jail wing. The steel cells cost something like $50,000, and this cost is not an extravagant expenditure. For a century to come Escambia county will need, let all good people hope, no enlargement of its jail facilities; and for a hundred years to come the county is protected against any possibility that there will be any blot on its scutcheon caused by illegal executions of prisoners.

A detailed account of the jail wing would be too long. It is sufficient to give a few brief facts. Provision is made for caring for white men, white women, colored men and colored women, in different blocks of the cell system. In the block for white men are seventy-two bunks, in thirty-six cells. These are arranged in three tiers, one above the other. From the halls leading into the building from the southwest corner entrance is had the main corridor of the cell blocks through great steel doors. The corridors on which the cells are located are shut off from this corridor by other heavy doors. The cells are locked and unlocked by a system of levers located in the main corridor. The door is in a steel cabinet which can only be opened by a combination lock, which opens a blind key-hole. From this cabinet the cells, one or more at a time, may be opened, allowing the prisoner to enter the small corridor. He is still shut away from liberty by three sets of double steel doors, made of steel so hard that the average back makes absolutely no impression on it. This set of cells is typical of the other blocks.

In addition to these cells is a large, doubly protected death cell for condemned murderers, two padded cells for the insane, four hospital wards, a kitchen, dining room, and sheriff's offices. For protection against fires and mobs, there are nine standpipes throughout this part of the building, from which a two-inch stream is directed down to three-fourths of an inch, may be thrown. To avoid the possibility of workmen passing tools to the prisoners, all the mechanism of the toilet is hidden in the wall. The cell block is located in the blind utility corridors, absolutely preventing any access to the prisoners by workmen engaged in repair work. The building is equipped with a complete heating system.

Not a cheerful place.
The cells themselves are well-lighted and well-ventilated. A jail at best is not a cheerful place. This jail is as cheerful as one can be, and as comfortable.

At best, however, there is no spirit of hope or gladness about it. Such laughter as is heard is tinged with bitterness. The involuntary inmates are for the most part battered human wrecks, washed up on the shores of time, stripped of all that makes the sweetness of life. They have lost the balance wheel, self-control, and have become dangerous to their fellow men. They are here, not because society has accused them, not because society clearly wants them to live in this world, but because society must protect itself, and in no way can this protection be secured without making it bitterly hard for those from whom the protection is being sought. Since there must be jails, Escambia county has shown its wisdom in making the jail as strong and forbidding as possible, and it may be safely stated that this jail is a well-built, not for temporary use, but for the years to come, and will stand as a warning to men and women who have an impulse to crime. The county building, with the exception of its few incomplete details, which will doubtless be later worked out, is a credit to the county. It would, in fact, be a credit to a much larger community.

TEACHERS, ATTENTION.

The next teaching examination will begin on Tuesday morning, Sept. 3rd, next. That for the teachers will be held in school building No. 1 and that for colored teachers in school building No. 31. All who wish or expect to teach in this county this school year are urged to prepare for and take this examination.

There will be no special examination for any person living in this county for if they expect to teach it is their duty to attend and take this regular examination.

TO PILFER IS WIFE'S RIGHT

SHOWS GENIUS WHEN SHE GOES THROUGH HUSBY'S POCKETS AND SELECTS THE SMALL COINS.

Special to The Journal.
Cambridge, Aug. 3.—"Women are fast developing financial genius, and a sign of it is their going through their husbands' pockets for loose change. Women can't help that, and they need not try to. Its root is planted deep in the womanly nature," so says Mrs. A. M. Palmer, society leader of Stamford, Conn.
"Women go through their husbands' pockets to take care of their money for them. Men never have much in their pockets, which proves that they can't take care of their money. Women do not waste the money they take from their husbands. Often it goes to the bank and stays there."
"This pocketbook searching is an indication of economy. Something is going to waste. We conserve it. Whoever has the instinct for saving has the financial means in embryo. It is at an early rate an excellent beginning. Furthermore, women are every bit as honest as men."
