

Will you wet down your roughage and save several dollars on every ton?

SOME farmers are still paying top prices for old style cottonseed hulls because they prefer a bulky filler. Others are paying much less for and are making them as bulky as old style hulls by wetting them down a half hour or so before using.

BUCKEYE

By adding an equal part of water to Buckeye Hulls and stirring thoroughly they will swell and give you as bulky a roughage as you want. Most important, the bulkiness will be due to water which is of value to your cattle—not to lint which has no food value whatever.

Other Advantages

Buckeye Hulls go farther. They allow better assimilation of other food. No trash or dust.

Mr. Benjamin Thompson, Bald Knob, Ark.,

is feeding Buckeye Hulls to stock cattle. He says that he gets more food value per ton with less waste. He has bought five tons and has them stored in barn. He says that they occupy less space than old style hulls.

To secure the best results and to develop the ensilage odor, wet the hulls thoroughly twelve hours before feeding. It is easy to do this by wetting them down night and morning for the next feeding. If at any time this cannot be done, wet down at least thirty minutes. If you prefer to feed the hulls dry, use only half as much by bulk as of old style hulls.

Book of Mixed Feeds Free

Gives the right formula for every combination of feeds used in the South. Tells how much to feed for maintenance, for milk, for fattening, for work. Describes Buckeye Hulls and gives directions for using them properly. Send for your copy to the nearest mill.

Recreation Supplied Sammies In France By the Y. M. C. A.

Paris, July 18.—(Correspondence of The Associated Press.)—The gigantic task of supplying American soldiers in the training camps and at the front with recreation has been undertaken by the Army and Navy Young Men's Christian Association. Organized early in May, its French branch already has leased and opened a large clubhouse and headquarters in this city and have established centers at the permanent American base twenty-five miles behind the lines of the Western front and at several ports where American sailors, soldiers, ambulance drivers, aviators and others engaged in war work disembark.

Under a comprehensive plan outlined by directors of the local branch, working in conjunction with military authorities and American Young Men's Christian Association officials, representatives of the association will follow the troops wherever they go, into the training camps in America, on the largest troop ships crossing the ocean, at ports of debarkation, into the French training camps and advance bases and even into the dug-outs near the front trenches.

Five Young Men's Christian Association secretaries, trained in special branches of the association's work, will accompany each brigade of approximately 5,000 men into the training camp in America and continue with the unit until it reaches the front. Each Y. M. C. A. unit will be equipped with a barracks or a hut which will serve as a recreation center and an attempt will be made to provide the soldier with all the comforts, conveniences and privilege that his family would like to provide for him. These barracks and huts will be equipped with reading, writing and game rooms, shower baths and other facilities for indoor and outdoor recreation.

Later, if the demand warrants, the association plans to open attractive clubs for officers in the naval and military service. These will be located at ports of debarkation, advance bases and in the urban centers where officers are likely to congregate. They will be operated independently of those provided for the men.

Much already has been accomplished by the Y. M. C. A. in Paris. The idea of establishing a Paris branch was conceived early in April by D. A. Davis, a trained American Y. M. C. A. secretary. The first meeting was held May 9 when an organization was perfected and the objects of the association outlined to a group of interested American residents in this city. No time was lost in preparing for the vanguard of the great American army and arrangements were soon completed to have Y. M. C. A. meet all incoming troops and to travel with them to their stations. Consequently, when the first expeditionary unit arrived, Y. M. C. A. men were on the ground waiting for it and they accompanied the troops from the temporary camp to the advance base.

Late in June a handsome private mansion at 31 Avenue Montaigne, just off the central point of the Avenue des Champs-Elysees, was leased for the duration of the war and a period of three months after its conclusion. It was immediately converted into an administrative headquarters of the association and a clubhouse for Americans engaged in war work of all kinds, including Americans with the British and Canadian forces, of whom there are approximately 40,000. Reading and waiting rooms were opened, pool and billiard tables installed and shower baths provided. French classes have been started for officers and men and a large number have enrolled. Tennis courts have been made available to men in the service and early in July a baseball field was formed among the ambulance, aviation and other units in the city.

Arrangements are being made to provide sleeping quarters for 300 men for the benefit of those who may come to the city on leave or are quartered here, preparatory to joining their units. A canteen will be opened at the Paris headquarters to provide the "Sammies" with candies and American cigarettes and tobacco, which are difficult to obtain in France. Mr. and Mrs. Vincent Astor recently purchased one of the largest restaurants at a French seaport and turned its management over to the Y. M. C. A. with instructions to supply American soldiers and sailors with American food at reasonable prices.

The Paris headquarters were occupied until recently by Napoleon Magne, whose grandfather Pierre Magne, France's celebrated minister of finance, received the mansion as a gift from Emperor Napoleon III. The house is furnished in the style of the Second Empire, the decorations and chimney pieces being authentic. In the ante-chamber is a fine marble bust of Napoleon III, the gift of the Emperor to Pierre Magne.

The officers of the Paris association are: President, James R. Barbour; vice-president, Dr. Edmund Gros; secretary D. A. Davis and treasurer, J. Ridgely Carter. Lewis A. Crossett has come to Paris as a special representative of the War Work Council of the American Y. M. C. A. to supervise the financial work of the association. Francis B. Sayre, son-in-law of President Wilson, also arrived recently and is attached to the headquarters staff.

Practical Talks on Diseases of the Eye, Ear, Nose and Throat

By DR. W. J. BENN.

(A series of articles on diseases of eye, ear, nose and throat, by Dr. W. J. Benn will appear in The Journal from time to time. The doctor is an advocate of the principle of health, education and thinking, that a knowledge of conditions leading up to disease, and also of diseases, will assist in a more intelligent understanding between the physician and his patient.)

The first article, on the Care of the Eyes, is published today.

Why is it that the care of the eyes receives so little consideration on the part of so many people?

When we take just a moment to realize that our eyes are our best friends and that without them we are solely handicapped, does it not seem that more thoughtful care should be bestowed on them?

What is the value of a beautiful complexion or beautiful hair, artistically coiffured, if the pleasing effect is to be spoiled by red lids and blood-shot eyes?

Men spend an hour or so, in the barber chair, over a shampoo, a hair shave, a scalp treatment and a facial massage and the moment they step into the street they screw up their eyes to protect their eyes from the strong light because of some inflammatory condition in their eyes. Ladies spend hours with the manicure, or at home, having their nails trimmed and buffed and polished, all of which is proper, and pretty hands and nails are attractive—but they don't harmonize with crusty eyelids or lids which are half closed to keep out the light or bleary, blood-shot eyes.

Do not forget that rich complexions, artistically arranged hair, clean teeth and pretty hands are all commendable; but blue or brown glasses, by their failure to harmonize, spoil the effect, and the same amount of time spent on the care of the eyes, which was necessary to produce the other attractiveness, might produce a harmonious whole which would be above criticism. By "care of the eyes" is not meant penciling the brows and lashes or the use of drugs to dilate or contract the pupils, for any of these procedures will hardly add beauty to one's eyes and all of them are more or less associated with danger, especially the indiscriminate application of drugs. When your lids begin to itch and later to burn and then smart they are telling you, in the only language they are able to employ, that there is something wrong—that they need attention; and the wise individual heeds the first gentle appeal, the itching, and does not wait for the more forcible expression when the lids begin to smart and become crusty and "glued" together through the night and the lashes fall out and the eye-ball becomes inflamed. For, by this time, it may be that some condition has become established which will be hard to remove—if possible.

Just as "tall oaks from little acorns grow," so deep-seated inflammation is often the result of neglecting what may seem only a trifle. There are so many conditions leading up to "sore eyes" that the patience of a casual reader would become exhausted long before an enumeration of them could be fairly begun, and the more one studies the causes which give rise to ocular inflammation the more one is surprised at the multitude of causes.

One of the chief causes of "sore eyes" is the need of glasses to overcome a deficiency in either the refractive or the accommodative ability of the eye. The refraction of the eye is governed by the same physical law which governs the refraction of rays of light in any other connection, and distinct images of objects at which we look should be created within the eye without any muscular effort on the part of the eye.

If this cannot be done, glasses should be placed before the eyes to redirect the rays of light so that the eyes may remain passive, or in a state of quiet repose; as far as the muscular structure is concerned.

By accommodative is meant the ability of the eye to adjust itself for different distances. This requires, in the normal eye, only the involuntary muscular movement; but, when there is present an insufficiency of the involuntary muscles and a voluntary effort is necessary, inflammation is brought on. Muscular insufficiency may also be corrected by the use of proper glasses.

Many people dislike wearing glasses, and a self-respecting oculist will hardly require a patient to wear glasses if they are not needed, but to delay the use of glasses when, by using them, other and more serious conditions might be overcome, is certainly choosing the greater of two evils.
