

THE VOW OF DEATH.

It was still dark when they came out of the Kur-saal. They both stopped involuntarily and looked up at the heavens. There was a brownish streak athwart the sky pretending the coming dawn.

"It seems to have been settled for us, Charles," said the taller of the two.

"What else is there to do?"

"Oh nothing. I do not even know that I am sorry."

"Ah, but you have tasted all the joys, while I—"

"Yes, you, you don't know the bitterness of it, at least of some of it. As for me, I have seen and felt it—all."

The other man threw back the cape of his liveriness. His face was drawn, in his blue eyes there was a look that comforted badly with the tilt of his opera hat. He was very young, perhaps he looked younger than he was. The fair mustache that curled on his lip added to the boyishness of his face.

The tall man stopped and faced him. He was clean faced, the sneer of cynicism that revealed his mental habit, perhaps his nature, hardly detracted from the beauty of his face. It was clean cut as a cameo. There was not a weak line in the countenance that the other looked up into.

"Madame le Clerc will certainly not be gratified to see you when you tell her at breakfast that you are finished, cleaned out, have nothing, not even the price of the wine that she will order. I am rather glad that it is settled. I have no wish to be gazetted as a hotel swindler. For me I am going to put a period to it here, as we said." They had stopped again on the lower step of the broad stairway leading down from the casino.

"The revenues of M. le Prince will be chargeable for the cost of a double funeral, and it is some satisfaction to know that all the world will be advised of our taking off," said the dark man. He thrust his hand into his pocket. The old moon glinted with a cold, sinister flicker on the barrel of a derringer pistol.

The face of the younger man worked spasmodically. He looked swiftly about, then seized the pistol out of the other's hand.

"A moment," he said. Then slowly he raised the weapon. In the act he beat his head.

"Farewell, Charles," said the other. Suddenly the younger stopped and picked up from beneath his feet on the gravel walk a yellow coin. He laughed hysterically as he held out a gold napoleon.

"We have another chance," he said. The other frowned.

"It may mean a respite," he said. "Shall we go back?"

"Go back?" Why of course. It is an omen. Ah, life is good after all, my friend, do not you think? This time he laughed without constraint.

"Yet if it should be but a respite?" said the other.

"Then let it be a respite, but I believe it is for a long time."

"Still if we lose?"

"Then the compact holds and M. le Prince will pay for a double funeral."

"Who plays?"

"You do. I have no luck."

"But you have known Madame le Clerc."

"Was that luck? I don't know," said the younger man.

They approached the table. Men, with flushed faces, the women, haggard and disheveled, made up the greater part of the gamblers at that hour. Here and there was a steady-nerved and impassive-faced man, or an American playing for the love of excitement and careless of the outcome. The monotone of the croupier was the one sound to break the silence of the great room. They made their way to a table that had fewer players than the others.

"Play 10 francs," whispered the fair man. The other answered him with a look of disdain. He staked the gold piece on the red. The ball spun around the disk.

"Sixteen, red, under and even," sang the croupier. An eager gleam came into the face of the younger man. The other made no sign, but let the money lay.

"Twenty-three, red, over and odd," said the dealer. There were four gold pieces where there had been but one. The player placed one shining disk on the seven and two on the odd.

"Seven, red, under and odd," said the croupier, paying the bets while yawning. The dark man took over thirty-five napoleons from the number seven and four from the odd field. The fair man at his elbow wet his lips. The gleam in his eye was not good to see. He twitched nervously as the player put gold pieces back on the seven and scattered a few others in the field.

"The seven repeats," sang the croupier. The other players looked up at the impassive face of the winner. The dealer pushed four heaps of gold over to him and cried: "Make your play, mesdames et messieurs."

"It is enough," whispered Charles. "More than 3,500 francs." The other did not even glance at him. He made five bets on single numbers and lost.

"Do not tempt fate," said the younger man in his ear. "Let us be off." The player looked at him as though annoyed.

"Will you play?" he asked.

"No, but—"

"Monsieur is interfering with the play," interjected a polite man with the bearing of a lord.

It was a floor manager. Charles turned away with a gesture of despair.

For a few minutes he sat on a nearby divan. His nervousness was palpable.

"That madman, he will lose all! Dieu, why did I not play myself! And that money! I must stop him."

He staggered back as he looked in front of the player. There were two louis left of the pile. Then he stiffened.

"I will await you, monsieur," he said, and returned to the divan.

What subtle provision of nature is it that makes the condemned man to sleep through his last night on earth? Charles lay back on the divan. He was quite composed, ready to face the death that he knew was inevitable.

"Will she care?" he asked himself. Certainly she would care if he presented himself before her and told her he had not the means to discharge the bill at the hotel. He thought it all over. There was nobody who would care very much except the sister who teaching French in England—and she would probably never know. It was tiresome, after all, this struggle to keep up appearances, and look after Madame le Clerc. There was not even the assurance that madam cared to be looked after. There had been a time and—well, that was not worth thinking of. He fell asleep while the click of the ivory ball marked the signal for the croupier's cry.

A half hour afterwards the other stood at the table, with a great pile of gold before him. There was a flicker of annoyance in his face, a gesture of disdainful indifference as the dealer announced:

"The bank is closed, monsieur has won the limit. Will monsieur have notes for the gold?" The player pushed the gold over and paid no attention to the clamorous comment of the others, who took the good luck of this one man as a theft of their own chances.

"One hundred and twenty-six thousand francs," said the dealer, pushing over the notes. He turned away listlessly and his eyes fell on the recumbent form of the other. He walked over and looked down on the sleeping face. His eyes narrowed to a slit. One corner of his mouth was raised the least bit.

"One hundred and twenty-six thousand francs," he thought. "Not bad for one. Cleo le Clerc—well, she might make two bites of a moiety of it. I think—Come, wake up!" He touched the other. Wholly awake instantly the younger man looked up in the face of the other. In its calm he read his doom.

No word was spoken until they had passed the spot where Charles had picked up the gold piece less than an hour before.

"You might have put it off if you had stopped when I wanted you to," he said. The other hesitated an instant. Perhaps there was an idea in his mind that he could afford to divide. If there was it was banished instantly.

"My friend," he said, "we were not playing for a day's respite."

With a despairing motion the fair young man put the pistol to his mouth and fired.

"Charles was always so precipitate," he said to Madame le Clerc as he filled her glass with a consoling liquor. "If he had but waited!"

Madam looked up at him steadily with eyes that were red from weeping.

IT SCARES PEOPLE

Who comes of a consumptive family when they begin to cough and the lungs are painful. But it is a fact beyond dispute that consumption is not and cannot be inherited. The microbe which breeds disease must absolutely be received by the individual before consumption can be developed.

Men and women who have been afflicted with obstinate coughs, bronchitis, bleeding of the lungs, emaciation and weakness, have been perfectly and permanently cured by the use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It cures the cough, heals the lungs, and builds up the body with solid flesh.

"When I commenced taking your medicines, eighteen months ago, my health was completely broken down," writes Mrs. Cora L. Sunderland, of Chaneyville, Calvert Co., Md. "At times I could not even walk across the room without pain in my chest. The doctor who attended me said I had long trouble, and that I would never be well again. At last I concluded to try Doctor Pierce's medicines. I bought a bottle of 'Golden Medical Discovery,' took it, and soon commenced to feel a little better, then you directed me to take both the 'Golden Medical Discovery' and the 'Favorite Prescription,' which I did. Altogether I have taken eighteen bottles of 'Golden Medical Discovery,' twelve of the 'Favorite Prescription,' and five vials of 'Pellets.' I am now almost entirely well, and do all my work without any pain whatever, and can run with more ease than I could formerly walk."
