comparable to the power and influence that Morgan wields in the markets and exchanges of the world today.

Mr. Gladstone's idea that the accumulation of $200,000,000 under one personal control was dangerous would have to be reconstructed to fit Morgan's case.

He has gone so far beyond those figures that he probably looks upon them somewhat contemptuously.

BE GUARDED HIMSELF.

Now that General Brooke is retired, it is interesting to recall one of his favorite stories, which has to do with the civil war. He says that he was absent from his regiment for a few days at Washington toward the end of that struggle, and that upon returning, somewhat unexpectedly, he made an impromptu inspection of the camp. There had been no fighting, and discipline had been considerably relaxed, a number of small thefts had recently been committed, and a negro had been arrested on suspicion. When General Brooke, then a colonel, reached the guard tent he was surprised to find nobody about. He lifted the flap and looked inside. There sat a colored man in a second-hand uniform, smoking and playing with a kitten.

"De guard!" repeated the negro. "Oh, dey's all out playin' ban' ball."

"But where's the corporal of the guard, then?" he demanded.

The negro grinned.

"De corporal," he responded, "is de bes' player in de regiment."

"Great heavens, man! Then where's the prisoner? Have they taken him along with them to play, too?"

The fellow's grin broadened.

"No," he said, "dey haven't done that. I's de prisoner."

THE COAL ROBBERS.

"Coal sold at $14 a ton today." —(Associated Press dispatch from Philadelphia dated Sept. 20th.)

This means that misery, suffering and death are being endured by millions of people in this country because of the infamous avarice of a lot of men who have outraged every principle of humanity and justice, and placed themselves beyond the pale of consideration.

They drove thousands of miners to a strike in which they are heroically persisting, and in which all fair-minded men hope they will be victorious.

These plutocratic robbers cannot drive the people too far. They have pressed the patience of the public already almost to the limit.

They are directly and solely responsible for the strike.

The manner in which they have wronged the honest laborer out of whose sweat their millions have been coined is one of the most infamous assertions of unprincipled power ever seen.

They are laying up wealth against the day of wrath, and the inevitable result will come.

And when it does it will be a fearful visitation, but a just one. —Atlanta Journal.

NEW DYSPESPIA CURE.

Justice Shiras has a collar button story which he tells with a great deal of gusto, says the Chicago Record-Herald. A man in Pittsburg, where he used to live, had a wife who was complaining of dyspepsia, and she heard of a certain remedy that was put up in capsules. Her husband bought a dozen at a drug store and brought them home in a pill box. At the same time he bought a dozen collar buttons made of a metallic composition that looked very much like pearl, and the druggist gave him a pill box similar to that in which the capsules were put up to carry them to his wife, and the same day she began to take the medicine. After she had taken twelve doses she was entirely cured, and advertised the wonderful remedy all over the neighborhood. About this time her husband lost his collar button, and opening his pill box found it empty. A brief investigation showed that the capsules in the other pill box were still there, and that his wife had swallowed twelve composition collar buttons, and been entirely cured of dyspepsia.

UP-TO-DATE FABLES.

Tom McNeas in Topeka Mail and Breeze.

A country bull dog who was a born scrapper visited the city one day and noticed what he took to be another dog lying in front of a handsome mansion. The dog was simply an ornament made out of stone, but the country dog was not onto that fact and immediately commenced to look for trouble. He walked up to the stone dog, growled, showed his teeth and made several hostile demonstrations, but to his astonishment the stone dog paid no more attention to his movements than if he had been in some other country. This indifference made him red hot and he made more passes at the stone dog, but got no more response. It seemed indeed to him that the more he growled and circled about the stone dog the more indifferent that animal became. Finally he gave it up and went away full of bitterness and disappointment.

An acquaintance seeing him a little later and noticing the look on his countenance said: "You have the appearance of having been up against a proposition that you could not handle. Did you strike a dog that was able to clean you out?"

"That is just what I don't know and that is what knocks me out. I struck a dog down here that will neither run or fight. I handed him out all the hot remarks that I know of, and he paid no more attention to me than if I hadn't been present. If he had jumped onto me and whipped the wley out of me I wouldn't have felt half so sore."

Moral: Nothing will get away with an individual who is hunting for trouble more effectively than to treat him with silent contempt.

A young man who figured that he was wise beyond his years took a shine to an auburn-haired maiden. But he said to himself: "I will not make the mistake of many young men who are too hasty. I will proceed to get solid with the girl's parents so that there will be no rocks in the way when it comes to the final show down." So the young man would go over in the evening and swap conversation with the old man for a couple of hours until the latter's jaws would begin to fly open as he yawned, like the opening of cellar doors. When this occurred the discreet young man would take the hint and go home. He also took occasion to help the old gentleman with his chores.

This part of the performance suited the old man to the extent that he came at last to the point where he allowed the discreet youth to milk the cow and feed the hogs and carry in the coal every evening. The old lady also got in the habit of making a sort of errand boy out of the discreet young man. When this sort of business had gone on for a year the discreet youth concluded that it was time for the next move and he took the opportunity when he was helping the old gentleman shuck out a shock of corn to tell him that he would be glad to have the opportunity to call on his daughter. The old man looked him over in a sympathetic way for a few moments and then said: "I'm sorry to hev to dissapint ye, young feller, but the fact is that my darter has been engaged for more'n a year to a chap who lives in the city. They air expectin' to be tied up next week."

And when the discreet young man went home and figured up that the time he had spent in helping the old man with his chores and in running errands for the old lady amounted to about three months all told, he dug up a lot of language which he had laid away and had never expected to use except in a case of great emergency.

Moral: There are cases where it is possible to be too all-fired careful.

SUCH MEN ARE DANGEROUS.

Shakespeare in his "Julius Caesar" says of Cassius that he could not be trusted because he was too lean.

Now we have the terror of men who cannot be trusted because they are too fat—financially.

Mr. Gladstone was very deeply impressed by the rapid accumulation of immense wealth in the United States, and inquired much into the causes that made it possible.

It is related that when he was informed that one man in this country, William H. Vanderbilt, owned and controlled $200,000,000 in negotiable securities he declared that this was too great a power for any one man to have, and that the government should look after a man when he had accumulated that much money. Mr. Gladstone probably meant that there should be for such huge fortunes a rising scale of taxation for the benefit of the community.

But if Mr. Gladstone regarded William H. Vanderbilt a man whom the government should look after, what would he say about Pierpont Morgan?

Moody's Manual of Corporation Securities in its latest edition states that the influence of this man is paramount in 55,555 miles of railroad, or even one-fourth of the total mileage of the country; that this mileage is capitalized at $3,002,949,571; that he dominates the United States steel corporation with a capitalization of $1,389,339,556, and three minor trusts; and that he is now to control a steamship combination of a capital at the start of $170,000,000. The total capitalized power of Morgan is represented by $4,737,280,527—this aside from the influence which necessarily radiates out in all directions from so colossal a concentration of financial might. When Gladstone was informed that he had a man in America (William H. Vanderbilt) worth $200,000,000 in negotiable securities, he declared that it was too great a power for one man to have, and that the government should look after him. Apparently the government will have to look after Morgan.
