

Cotton.—The tendency of the cotton market is once again upward. We are inclined to believe that the point of lowest depression for the season has been passed. One thing is certain there has been no increase of the crop, above the demands of consumption. The rates in New Orleans have advanced 18 cent.

War feeling in England.—Rumors have been brought out in the Cambria, that there is a split in the British Cabinet respecting the Oregon question and the relation with his country.

Sir Robert Peel, the most sagacious statesman now in England, is said to be in favor of renewing negotiations and an amicable adjustment; while the Duke of Wellington breathes nothing but war and obstinacy. The Duke is a thick headed old Tory about 50 years behind the age; and if there is a difference, it will be easy to prophecy which side will carry the point.

Vicksburg Sentinel.

Book Farming.—It has often been, and still is common, for those who are contented to plod on in the same way their fathers pursued, without availing themselves of the advantages of the experience of others, to cry out against "book farming," particularly when they are solicited to subscribe for an agricultural periodical; but the farmer who feels an interest in the advancement of the science of agriculture, and has an eye to the improvement of his land and crops, will carefully examine before he condemns works of this kind. The principal objection urged against agricultural works, is that the writers are not practical farmers. It may be that editors of agricultural papers do not have the management of large farms—for the duties of such a station would preclude the possibility of attending to one; but we will venture the assertion, that there is not one of this class in the country who has not the interest of the agriculturist at heart, and who does not cultivate at least a small quantity of land, in the most scientific manner, carefully noting the results of different modes of cultivation, and making them known thro' the columns of his paper. Besides, I would ask, who are usually the contributors of such papers; those who feel an interest in such matters, or those who care nothing whatever about them? An answer to this question will be found by consulting the pages of such works, where we will find the communications therein contained are invariably written by the best practical farmers, men upon whose judgment we would confidently rely, were we to ask their opinions in regard to the different modes of cultivation which we knew they had tried. And yet quite strange to tell, there are many who think that such information loses its value because it is printed, and therefore are unwilling to follow the suggestions contained in an agricultural paper, although they will not hesitate to adopt any thing they have known their neighbor to practise successfully, notwithstanding that neighbor may have been indebted to an agricultural newspaper for it. Now, if farmers in a small district of country can be mutually benefited by frequently consulting each other in regard to their modes of managing different crops, it cannot be denied that greater benefits will ensue, where those of a larger district have an opportunity of frequent interchange of thought as is given in the columns of a newspaper or periodical having an extensive circulation. We will venture the assertion, that no farmer can take a well conducted agricultural periodical, without finding in every number something worth the price of a year's subscription. One of the best evidences of the value of such works, is the increasing demand for them; another, is the fact that wherever they are extensively circulated, we soon perceive a decided improvement in the appearance of the country as well as the products of the soil. In truth, we will venture to tell, in four cases out of five, whether a farmer reads an agricultural paper merely by examining his farm and implements.—Western Cultivator.
