The man who is figuring out how to live on one dollar a week, must be afraid of a Democratic victory.

If late reports are true, China is again praying for peace. The great trouble is that she is a little late in her supplications. Anyhow, "the prayers of the wicked availeth nothing," according to the Good Book.

Kentucky produced 21,000,000 gallons of whisky last year, together with the toughest crop of politics ever raised in the state. She may beat the record this year, but why she should even try is past finding out.—New York Mail and Express.

Next week the members of the Grand Army of the Republic will meet in annual encampment at Chicago. The old veterans deserve the very best that life affords, and we hope that their re-union this year will be pleasant in every particular.

Quick justice was meted out to Louis Peck, the Akron fiend. He was arraigned, pleaded guilty, was sentenced for life and landed in the penitentiary within four hours. It is hoped that this will serve as a preventative against any and all such occurrences in the future.

It is now understood that all obstacles have been removed, and that there will be no unnecessary delay in the matter of building the court house. The people some time ago, by their votes, expressed themselves as being in favor of a new building, and now that all arrangements have been made, it is fair to assume that the work of constructing the new court house will soon be commenced.

The Leader appreciates in full measure the many favorable comments that are being made with reference to our complete telegraphic news service. The people know a good thing when they see it, and it is not necessary to tell them that by reading the Leader they get a full account of all happenings up to three o'clock in the morning, and they also know that to depend upon any other source is running the risk of getting a very brief, inaccurate and garbled account twelve hours old, or probably even worse than that—not getting it at all.

Court Business Declining. A statement just issued by the Secretary of State Kinney shows that court business in Ohio is on the decline.

During the past year the number of cases pending in the Circuit Courts of the state were 3,161, as compared with 3,441 for the year preceding. The cases taken from the Circuit to the Supreme Court numbered 259, as compared with 310 for the preceding year.

In the Common Pleas Courts the falling off in litigation is very marked. During the year there were 55,231 cases in this branch of the courts, while the year before there were 72,220.

In days of prosperity people have no time for lawsuits—litigation is one of the many evil products of depression.

Death's Significance in Kentucky. A Marietta lady who is visiting in Kentucky, has written a letter to a friend in this city, in which she tells a story that is amusing and at the same time is a reminder of the fact that even children there learn early the fact that death does not always come naturally in the Blue Grass State.

THE EXPOSITION NOT OVER CROWDED.

The Irish exhibit One of the Poorest of the Lot—An Interesting Letter.

Paris, France, August 13.—Being a constant visitor to the Exposition, it strikes me that the success or failure of an Exposition to an individual depends largely on just how the individual takes it. If he takes it seriously it must do him an immense amount of good and may therefore be regarded as a success; if he takes it as the great majority do, that is carelessly, listlessly, gappingly, why then it does him neither good nor harm, and so succeeds in none of its purposes and aims. I make these remarks because there is a very large class of people of all countries, America, as usual, foremost among them where anything is useful to be learned, who have nothing in common with the crowds one sees wandering in the last stages of boredom about the palaces and grounds. I refer to the Congressionists. Of these there must be quite a hundred thousand for already at least thirty Congresses have been held and there are plenty more to follow. Seven thousand members attended the Medical Science Congress alone. Architecture, Law, chronometry, medical electricity, pharmacy, dermatology, customs, regulations—all most every conceivable subject, in fact, has its Congress, to have it, or has had it, and very few indeed of those who have attended them, or his own special one of them, has done so and not been greatly benefitted. Are not these people different from the gaping multitude, and for them is not the Exposition a success?

One of the Congresses held this week—that on Colonial Sociology—a better name would be Colonial Civilization—reminded me strongly of the discussions we used to hear in Paris towards the close of 1888, when the American commissioners, after the war with Spain, were here to draw up a treaty. The questions of taking the Philippines, and of what should be done with them, when taken, were burning ones throughout the period of negotiations, and the arguments then made, the objections raised, the hopes formed, were all almost identically reproduced by M. Decrais, the French Colonial Minister and other speakers at the Congress on Sociology. It would have done Senators Gray and Frye—the two anti-annexationist members of the Peace Commission—a great deal of good to hear the speeches, and particularly that of the French Minister with its noble breadth of view, as she pointed out, there are two orders of problems such acquisitions give rise to, the one material, regarding railways and roads and canals and other means of developing the colony, the other, on a higher plane, regarding the organization of a system under which the natives' moral and material conditions may improve, and they themselves recognize the fact and be grateful for it. I shall not be unkind enough to ask which of these orders of problem our government is grappling with. It is only too obvious, if the bystander really does see most of the game, that it is not grappling with, and cannot grapple with, either. However, this opinion is obiter dicta and only meant to show you how things look from the European end of the telescope.

An end, I hasten to add, which may be, and was very nearly being blocked up, so far, at least, as France is concerned. This is another way of saying that the dock strikes at le Havre, which have now lasted a week, threaten to put a stop to the steamer service between that port and the United, or indeed any, States; and but for the admiral good sense of the French Minister of Marine, M. de Lanessan, who for once kicked over the traces of officialism and put the French navy stokers on board the mail steamers, the Bretagne and succeeding steamers would not have been able to leave this side of the ocean at all. The question at issue is one of wages, the coal loaders, and stokers, and firemen, especially are not content and, like many other people in other departments of life, imagine they cannot be replaced. M. de Lanessan's prompt action must have come upon them as a very disagreeable surprise, and no doubt before I write again the strike will be over and the strikers wiser. The fact is they are discontented without reason. Their earnings are enough for comfortable existence and with economy they can save money. What more can they ask in an age where competition is so fierce?

To revert for a moment to the Exposition, Ireland puts in a decidedly poor appearance. It is fair however, to say that in one department, the textile, she is fairly strong, while she has one very curious exhibit, a display of pneumatic harness and saddlery from a far-away spot called Cornamona Doors, in the county Galway. The house of Guinness (Lord Iveagh) too, is well to the front with a special kios-que where nothing but "Stout" is sold, and a couple of Irish whisky firms have exhibits. But there is little else and absolutely nothing by which one could guess that Ireland was an agricultural country with a fertile soil and a strong and brainy population. One might surely expect dairy farming exhibits of some sort, some inventions in appliances used in agricultural industries, something new in bee culture, fishing-tackle, sporting apparatus? No, nothing of the kind. Linen from the more industrious North, and whiskey and beer to represent the rest of Ireland—that is the Irish contribution.

An Important Question.
