A FEW QUESTIONS?

Why did you throw that lamp away?
Was it because you couldn't find a burner?
Was it because you couldn't find a wick?
Was it because you couldn't find a chimney?
Was it because the collar came off?
If it was for any of these causes, don't throw another lamp away, but bring it to us and we will fix it for you. Why we will even fix your Center Draught lamp, so you can burn either gas or electricity in it.

NEW KING'S POWERS.

Restrictions Under Which Britain's Monarch Will Reign.

Curtailed of Royal Prerogative Effectuated by Parliament During the Reign of George III.—Limitations of Authority.

Considerable as are the powers of the new king, they are not unlimited. There are some very curious restrictions on the royal prerogative. The king cannot, for instance, communicate with his subjects as can the most menial of his servants; nor can he receive presents from his people save through officers of state or friends personally known to his majesty, says a London exchange.

The king could sell or give away the royal navy, but he could not spend a single farthing of public money without the consent of parliament. The king has no power over taxation, and could not create any new office with fees attached to it. Neither could he annex new fees to old offices. He could not increase the wages of one of his footmen, unless he did it out of his private funds, or without exceeding the allowance by parliament.

A curious curtailment of the royal prerogative is effected by an act of parliament passed in the reign of George III. This act deals with Sabbath breaking, and in it it is distinctly stated that the monarch cannot pardon offenders who have been convicted of a certain form of Sabbath breaking. Yet his majesty could pardon 99 per cent. of all the prisoners in the land.

Though no act of parliament is complete until it has been signed by the king, his majesty is subject to the laws that he signs, and cannot issue a proclamation contrary to law. If, for instance, it were the law of England that no train should travel at a rate exceeding 30 miles an hour, the king could not issue a proclamation exempting a certain train from the operation of the law. Nor can his majesty issue a proclamation which would injure the community, such as, for example, a proclamation exempting a whole town or neighborhood from serving on a jury.

Though the king could recall any subject from abroad, he cannot compel a subject to leave Great Britain. This disability does not cease to operate even in time of war, and, though at such a time the king could call upon every able man to take up arms, he could not force a single civilian to leave the country, even to carry on a necessary war.

His majesty could not set up courts such as the star chamber, the child of Henry VIII's misguided genius, nor could he invest a spiritual court with temporal power. Though his decision is absolute after a prisoner has been sentenced, he could not intervene before the course of justice before the sentence has been passed, nor could he exert any influence over the judges. Neither could he interfere in a case of private as opposed to public wrong.

The king is the only person who cannot arrest a suspected felon. No action can be taken against him for breaking the law, and therefore he is precluded from making an arrest, as, supposing the suspected prisoner were innocent, no action for false imprisonment could be taken against his majesty. The law, indeed, assumes that the king can do no wrong, which seems about as absurd as the legal assumption that the king cannot be under age and cannot die.

The king cannot exclude a member from parliament after he has been duly elected, nor can he delegate the duty of signing laws to anyone. His power of disposing of territory in time of peace has been disputed. In time of war his majesty could hand over London to France to bring the war to an end, but it seems clear that in time of peace his majesty cannot subject any part of the empire to the sway of a foreign power.

MESSAGES WERE SUCCESSFUL.

Mr. K. W. Shorman Uses a System Other Than Marconi's in Communicating from Ship to Land.

The steamship Georgic, which has arrived at New York from Liverpool, had on board as a passenger Mr. K. W. Shorman, who had charge of the experiments with wireless telegraphy on the Georgic off Brow Head. Mr. Shorman said that he sent messages to Brow Head from a distance of over 13 miles and received replies, but could not receive messages farther than that owing to the fact that the rolling of the ship somewhat disarranged his instruments. He does not use the Marconi, but a system invented by Col. Henry Montague Hosiery, secretary of Lloyd's, London, and Mr. Nevil Maskelyne, of the Egyptian hall, Piccadilly, London. The instrument on the vessel was attached to the metal of the ship and connected with wires which were attached to fore and aft stays of the steamer. The influence which conveys the message in wireless telegraphy is able to pass readily through insulators, such as in a glass, but is absorbed to a very great extent by all conductive materials, especially by sheet metals.

Wished He Had Known It. "Jack" Wilson, whose tomb is in the Little Cloisters at Westminster Abbey, was Shakespeare's tenor. He died at the age of 78 in 1673. The inscription on his tomb at the abbey was much obliterated, and under the direction of an antiquary a man was employed to recut the letters. The antiquary stood looking over him, so that he should make no mistake, and to make the time go pleasantly he dwelt at great length to the workman upon the grandeur and merits of the deceased. The man eventually stopped his work, and looking up at the antiquary, said: "I wish, sir, that we had known that he was such a swell before we run that there drain pipe through him!"
