A WONDERFUL CONGRESS.

Buckskin Bill Will Bring His Magnificent Exhibition to Marietta.

The most important event of the year is the visit of Col. V. F. Cody, Buckskin Bill, to Marietta, on Monday, June 3rd. He has the largest Wild West in the world and will give the people of this section a nine days' wonder.

He carries over 1,000 men and horses with him, and has cowboys, Indians, Mexicans, Gauchos of South America, Arabs, soldiers from many countries, cannon manned by regular United States artillery, and five bands.

He comes here with this small army Monday, June 3rd, and will give the greatest performance ever seen. Those who fail to go will miss the opportunity of their lives. It is the most magnificent aggregation in existence. See the grand street cavalcade at 10 o'clock on the morning of his arrival.

"It was almost a miracle. Burdock Blood Bitters cured me of a terrible breaking out all over the body. I am very grateful." Miss Julia Filbridge, West Cornwell, Conn.

SAND HILL.

Rev. and Mrs. Sullivan have returned from Pleasant City.

The Sand Hill base ball nine played a picked nine from Marietta College on the College athletic grounds Saturday. The game was called off on account of darkness, the score standing 9 to 10 in favor of Marietta. They will play again June 19 on the home grounds.

A Tragic Chapter in Tanner's Career.

(Chicago Chronicle.)

There may be many who are unaware of the fact that the late Governor John R. Tanner was at one time arrested and tried for murder. The circumstance happened in June, 1867, and was caused by the jealousy and hatred of a neighbor. For years there had been quarrels between John R. Tanner and Thomas Erskine, for whose death Tanner was tried, and this culminated on the occasion of the opening of a new road at which both men were forced to be present.

After Erskine had started home at the conclusion of work Martin, another neighbor, harnessed his team to the wagon, George Luse and John Tanner took a seat with him, Tanner occupying the middle of the seat, Martin drove. The question then arose whether to take the new road back past Erskine's house or some other way. By the new road the distance was only a mile and a half; by the other way it was nearly four miles. Tanner said that if they did not go by the new road Erskine would think he was afraid of him. They went by the new road. When they were within about 50 yards of the house they saw Erskine, James Rusk and Jacob Moots standing in front of the fence, by the tree, and about eight or ten feet from the spot where the wagon must pass Martin said:

"There is going to be trouble." He proposed to put the whip to his team and run by at full speed.

Tanner said: "You'll do nothing of the kind. Drive by in the ordinary way."

Erskine put up one hand and stopped the team, saying that he wanted a settlement of his account with Tanner right then and there, to which Tanner assented. Both men took out their account books and compared the items, checking them off until they reached the item in dispute between them. The amount of it was unimportant. John Tanner said:

"Tom, I've paid you that." "No, you haven't," said Erskine. "I did pay it and I'll make an affidavit that I did."

"That's the way some people get rich, by swearing to lies," Erskine replied.

"Don't talk that way to me; I don't propose to take it," said Tanner. "I will talk any way I please," was the response.

"I will show you," was Tanner's reply. With that he put his hand in his trousers pocket—he had on no coat—and, checking his impulse, drew his hand out again empty. If he had been a less cool and self-collected man the chances are that he would have fired then, but he did not.

"Draw your little pepper box; I'm prepared for you," was Erskine's response. Thus saying he stepped back to the tree and seized an ax by the top of the handle. At this Martin struck the horses with the whip and started the team. Erskine ran up behind the wagon with the drawn ax. Tanner jumped over the seat and stood immediately behind it.

As Erskine threw the ax Tanner fell forward in order to dodge it, firing his pistol at the same moment. The poll of the ax struck Tanner in the head and glanced off, raising a knot on the scalp. The blade of the ax, passing on, struck George Luse in the back, severing his shoulder blade and inflicting a wound which afterward proved fatal. The ax then fell over the front gate of the wagon at the horses' feet.

When Luse was hit he heard the report of the pistol, felt the wound and thought that Tanner had shot him. He fell over on the reins, stopping the horses. Martin picked up the lines and started them again. The ball from Tanner's pistol struck Erskine in the breast, on one of his ribs, which it followed, inflicting only a flesh wound, not serious in its character. He recovered himself, ran after the wagon, picked up the ax where it lay, then being within ten feet of the wagon, raised it for the purpose of throwing it when Tanner fired the second shot. The ball struck him this time in the temple and he fell in the road on his face, 60 or 70 feet from the starting point from which he had followed the wagon. The uplifted axe fell on his prostrate form. Tanner jumped out of the wagon and walked away, through the fields, in the direction of his house.

The first trial took place at the fall term of court, in 1868, Judge Camby presiding. The Rusk family were active in the prosecution, on Mrs. Erskine's account, and paid money in aid of it. All who were present at the fight in the road testified as to their recollection of it except Moots, who was dead. The jury left the courtroom some time in the afternoon between dinner and supper, and remained out all night. They agreed upon a verdict about daylight the next morning. All of them say that the verdict was a compromise, as it evidently must have been.

The case was called for a second trial at the April term of 1869, but, as shown in the affidavit of Wilford McElyea, was postponed on motion of the prosecuting attorney, F. D. Preston, on account of the absence of George Luse, one of the eye-witnesses of the fight. The second trial occurred in November, 1869. This jury, which was composed of eight Republicans, two Democrats and two jurors whose politics are unknown, after hearing the testimony (which was the same as at the former trial except that Luse was still absent) retired, and as soon as they could sign it returned a verdict of acquittal. This ended the case.

Girls Who Goad.

They have a poor opinion in Kansas of girls who gad. The Emporia Gazette tells that one of its reporters found five Kansan women out gadding Commercial street while the cooking school was in session. These young women are said to be daughters of respectable parents, though none of these are rich. The girls are all well dressed—one so overdressed, indeed, that Kansan good folk are wondering what her mother means. This overdressed girl is 17. She declares that she doesn't intend to learn to cook, and then she will never have to. The fact that her father went through the Bankruptcy Court last year does not affect her—at least, not for any useful purpose. The enterprising Kansan reporter found, on investigation, that one of the father's creditors was a baker, to whom he owed $215 for bread, pies and crackers.

The second girl of the quintet boasts that no one can teach her to cook like her mother. Under maternal instruction she has learned to make ten kinds of candy, four of cake and several artistic creations with whipped cream. She has not yet, however, made such progress as to enable her to know the difference between boiled meat and broiled meat, nor is she yet qualified to boil potatoes with their jackets on. The third girl of this Kansan group of women is described as a snappy little piece, who tells lots of boy stories, constantly making breaks and laughing at them. "She looks at the ground when she walks, and mimes along as though she were too nice for this world. She is always grunting on wash day, and her poor mother hasn't had a new dress since 1888, though Myrtle is dressed to kill." This classic description is, of course, from the pen of a Sunflower scribe.

He next turns his attention to a young married woman who is afflicted with the gadding mania. He says: "John Slowly is a railroad man. He has been married three years. He turns his money over to his wife every pay day, and she has bills for canned goods and ready-made food at six grocery stores. Their grocery bill is over $30 a month, and John can't see where it goes. He should look in the slop bucket. Half the food she cooks is spoiled, and none of it is ever made over."

There are a good many John Slowlys in this country, and entirely too many Mrs. John Slowlys, but the latter would have to reason d'etre were it not that the lazy women can too easily pick up fool husbands. Fool husbands and fool parents are responsible for the prevalence of the gadding woman, who is frequently met in Marietta, as well as elsewhere throughout the length and breadth of the land.

They are here, as well as in Kansas, "Misses Earle Risers," whose days are divided into three parts—sleep, sloth and street gadding. This class of girls avoid the cooking school. They are not home builders. They flirt with strangers, and irreverent young men claim that one may love them all after a first visit. This is, at all events, true of the Emporia species; and, possibly, true of her Marietta sister and of the girl who gads everywhere. Open air exercise is good for girls, but the girl whose only school for improvement is the street usually gets down to the standard of the street.

OAK GROVE.

The Oak Grove Missionary Society will meet with Mrs. Pascal Hoff, Marietta, Thursday, June 6.

Our neighborhood has had more than its share of sickness this winter. Scarlet fever, whooping cough and pink eye are the prevailing diseases.

Mr. W. L. Reckard has broken ground for a handsome new residence which will be erected soon.

Miss Elizabeth Weinheimer is spending a few weeks with relatives at Logan.

Mr. John Bowen is quite ill at the home of A. S. Melor.

Mr. Carroll Davis, of Marietta, spent Sunday calling on friends in this vicinity.

Miss Bertha Strucker was the guest of Miss Fannie Barker last week.

Mrs. Uhlhorn and daughter, Nettie, of Goodwin, O., are expected soon on a visit to her parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Syer, and to attend the High School commencement.

C. W. Reckard, who suffered with pink eye last week, is very much improved.

It's folly to suffer from that horrible plague of the night, itching piles. Doan's Ointment cures quickly and permanently. At any drug store, 50 cents.
