It was Christmas eve, and Alice Maitland sat alone in her luxuriously furnished boudoir, putting the finishing touches on the gifts she was to bestow on the morrow. She tied the last bit of scarlet ribbon about a jewel box with mathematical precision, tucked a bit of holly under the bow, and pushed it away from her with impatient weariness.

"There," she exclaimed, surveying the heap of packages that littered the table and the couch; "there, thank goodness, that's done! I've done my duty by my family and remembered every one that is likely to remember me, and I have worn myself to a frazzle, and brought on parcels trying to find things for people who already have everything there is. Let me see," she continued, taking up the packages one by one and checking them off with a smile that was half sad, and half cynical.

"Let me see—here is a silk smoking jacket for Uncle Joseph, that he will never wear, and the velvet cups that Aunt Maud coyly hinted would be an acceptable reminder of the blessed season to her; the string of pearls that Adele has been openly admiring for months, and a check for Jack for his college books—one's relatives aren't bashful about letting one know what they want, and that is a comfort, at any rate, at Christmas.

"Then, un-un-um, a gold bangle for Mayme Winslow that she will take right down to the jeweler's to appraise, and a toise shell and otch feather fan for Sally Stinton; she'll be sure to send me something, though she hates me, the little cat, and a couple of bronzes for dear old Mrs. Bullion, though where she'll put them in that overcrowded house of hers I'm sure I don't know, and—oh, the things for the servants, and steins and etchings for the men who have been nice to me—and—I don't believe I have forgotten anybody I love, or who holds a kindly thought for me.

"She passed abruptly, pushed the gay litter of costly trinkets away from her with disdainful hands, and with a sudden rush of tears, buried her face in her arms on the table.

"Yes," she murmured, brokenly to herself, "there is one that I have forgotten, and he is the one in all the world that I have remembered most, and to whom I would give all if I dared," and then she sat still.

"Who do you not send him some little trifle, just a token that you have not forgotten the old days?" suggested her heart.

"Never," said Pride.

"Even casual acquaintances may exchange gifts at Christmas," urged her heart, speculatively.

"He would cast my gift back at my feet," said Pride.

"Christmas," said her heart, "is the time of peace on earth and good will toward men. It is a time when old wrongs should be forgotten, when old wounds should be healed, when broken ties should be mended, and hearts estranged should be reunited. Why do you not kiss and make up, as children do?"

"What!" cried Pride, "and be flouted once more?"

"You were very tired of the old, empty life, with its monotonous rounds of insipid gaiety," went on her heart.

"You were that loneliest and most forlorn of human beings, a great heiress and an orphan. All your life you had had everything you wanted, except the thing you wanted most of all—sincere and disinterested love. Your father and mother had died before you could remember them, and you had been left to the care of a cold uncle and aunt, who thought that they had done their entire duty towards you by seeing that you were properly fed, clothed and educated, and implanting in you a distrust of every human being who came about you.

"You never knew a token that you have not forgotten the old days?" suggested her heart.

"Never," said Pride.

was being atrophied, and so you ran away from it all. You persuaded dear old Mrs. Bullion to take you away as her hired companion to a little quiet place, where no one would recognize you. You were plain little cotton gowns, and snobs who would have flunked before the rich Miss Maitland snubbed and ignored you, but there was a man who saw the woman's heart under the shabby gown, and the woman's brain under the common hat, and he loved you, and asked you to be his wife. "We shall be very poor," he said, "for I have my way yet to make in the world, but please God, we shall fight the battle out shoulder to shoulder."

upper shows a struggling young lawyer was, at the moment, engaged in delecting with his eye the photograph of a comely young woman. As she reached his office door Miss Maitland's courage wavered and sank, but, taking a death grip upon it, she hurriedly passed the office boy, and before she knew it was in his presence. "Alice!" he cried, starting to his feet, but she did not wait for him to speak. "Tom," she said, hurriedly, "I—have come to bring you a little Christmas present," and with that she dropped the enveloping cloak aside, and pinned upon her breast was a large placard with the inscription:
FOR TOM.
WITH ALICE'S LOVE.
"You darling," he murmured, folding her in his hungry arms. "It's so hard to know what to get or a man, so I just thought I'd bring myself," she said, hypocritically; "but h, Tom, please don't send this present back, and change it." But he stopped her mouth with his kisses.

ALCOHOL FOR AUTOMOBILES
The Challenge Oil & Paint Company, Toledo, Ohio, issue a folder showing "Frost Proof" Oil for Winter use for farm and automobiles. Their TWO-IN-ONE Alcohol is also making a hit; it keeps cooling water from freezing, cleans out all dirt and scale, and is approved by leading engineers. Enough for Winter season costs $3.50, including Beaume Hydrometer for testing. This would look like cheap insurance. They also want an automobile owner with some spare time who could look after their business in this locality. It might be well to write them if interested.
