Saving Money Now and in "The Good Old Days". That it is easier to save money now, notwithstanding the high cost of living, than it was years ago, is the contention of the Ohio War Savings Committee. Public has just issued a schedule of prices and wages paid centuries ago to prove its assertion.

In the middle of the 13th century eggs were two cents a dozen, a goose cost 6 cents and a hen 2 cents. Butter was 2 cents a pound and beef a half cent. Milk sold for 2 cents a gallon and cheese for one cent a pound. By the sixteenth century beef had gone to 6 cents a pound and pork to one cent a pound and sugar to 27 cents. In the eighteenth century chickens had advanced to 31 cents each, butter to 12 cents a pound, cheese to 5 cents a pound and meat to 1 cent a pint and meat to 6 cents a pound.

In spite of these prices however it was just as hard to get the wherewithal to buy as at present, for all the incomes were equally small. From 1200 to 1300 A. D. the average wage for unskilled labor was 8 cents a day. In fact in 1347 wages had dropped to 2 cents a day for a long day's work but after the great plague of the Black Death they advanced to 5 cents a day, continuing to advance until they reached 50 cents a day in 1500.

The worker of the old day was unable to secure interest on his savings nor was he offered a safe opportunity to invest. Government Savings officials here pointed out that the present day workman not only could save money because of high wages but that he had an opportunity to secure interest on his savings. They declared the working man could not find a safer investment now than War Savings Stamps.

Yes, if he is also an optician, he prepares the lenses and sees that they are properly adjusted to the features of the patient. Are most Optometrists also Opticians? Yes, practically all of them. What are some of the commonest defects of vision? Far and near sight and astigmatism are three that are frequently met with. Do these defects cause much annoyance to those who have them. The results of errors of vision vary with different people. Then astigmatic folks, for instance do not all suffer to the same extent? No, the degree of the error, and the health and temperament of the patient are factors in this respect.
