POLITICAL NOTES.

The sneer of Tilden's Reform is that is boosting Tilden.

The verdict of the country will be, that Tilden and his complotters and coplayers have been convicted of their own mouths; and that the country has escaped a great calamity by such a gang of corruptors missed, as by the skin of their teeth, the capture of the Government of the United States.

I declare, before God and my Country, that my entire belief that the votes and certificates of Florida, South Carolina and Louisiana were bought. Certainly they were, Governor! We have seen the tally, the tally, — price, purchasers, and even "The Interceder." But your people didn't live up to their bargain; — and the goods were not delivered.

The epithet should not be permitted to commend the Democrats of the United States Senate have declared unanimously that the Thirteenth, Fourteenth and Fifteenth Amendments to the Constitution are valid. The only excuse offered for their action is the ridiculous one that the Republicans fooled them into voting for a question whose full meaning they did not comprehend.

As for Tilden, though we accept his denial of any part in the dirty business of Pelton, Weed, Marble and the rest, we have no objection to his prestige, and can never again figure as a reformer. He has been caught in a mighty mean company, to say the least, and has not been above suspicion.

The South voted solidly for Mr. Tilden because he was the Democratic candidate. He lost the Presidency not by lack of votes, but by lack of courage.

The examination has not cleared up the Pelton case. It has only explained how a mass of correspondence touching bribery in one shape or another could be conducted under the nose of Mr. Tilden without his knowledge.

The Southern Democrats are still smarting under General Bragg's attack, and are using him as an excuse for lecturing the whole Northern Democracy of this Union.

These dreadful cases of Northern bulldozing, which has become so common, are not only a disgrace to this city, but a disgrace to the whole country.
