Stories of Success

ANDREW CARNEGIE

Some men succeed in almost everything. The business acumen that guides and rarely fails. The genius, industry and determination of that titan Scotsman, Andrew Carnegie, were amply in evidence right at the outset. At 12 he was a bobbin-boy at a dollar and a quarter a week in Pittsburgh; in the boiler room, at 13, earning two dollars; delivering messages at 14, and learning telegraphy; an operator at 15, and in his early 20's a railroad superintendent with $1,500 a year.

He smiled at difficulties, and rounded up every task he attempted. When asked how he established his fortune, he replied: "By saving my money. I have always put a little aside, and my revenue at all times, exceeded my expenses. To save is to have."

The road to wealth is the road to the savings account in some good bank. It is the road that leads to comfort and competency.

EDITOR RECOGNIZED.

Gen Sherwood seems to know that a country editor is worthy of recognition when he has a chance to give an appointment. Last week the name of Brother Pomeroy of Maumee was sent to the Senate for confirmation as Postmaster of that village. Brother Pomeroy is in every way worthy the appointment, and will give the people of that village a splendid administration of the office. We congratulate Mr. Pomeroy on his good luck and compliment Gen. Sherwood on his good judgment.

TOUCHING APPEAL.

(With Apologies to Messrs. Longfellow and Newton Newkirk).
 Lives of poor men, oft remind us,
 Honest men don't stand a chance;
 The more we work, there grow behind us
 Bigger patches on our pants.
 On our pants once bright and glossy,
 Now are stripes of different hue;
 All because our debtors linger
 And won't pay us what is due.
 Come now, folks; be up and doing;
 Pay your bill, however small,
 Or when the snow of winter strikes us,
 We shall have no pants at all.
