Household Hints

PREVENTS MOTHS

One of the serious problems confronting the housewife each spring is how to store furs and woollens so as to keep them free from moths while out of use.

Outside of cold storage, the following is the simplest, most effective and most economical plan:

First, take each fur or woolen garment, beat it well with a light wooden rod, shake out thoroughly and brush carefully; then hang on a line for several hours exposed to the sun and air.

After this sun bath, shake and brush again. Next, secure suitable pasteboard boxes such as tailors use, and in these lay the garments neatly folded. Then seal up the box carefully by gumming a strip of wrapping paper around the edges so as to leave no cracks.

Tobacco, camphor or cedar chips may be scattered over and between the garments, but these are simply repellants and are of no value if the moth eggs are allowed to remain in the garments.

If the preliminary work of beating, shaking, brushing and exposing to the sun and air and the packing be carefully done, there need be no fear of damage from moths while the garments are stored.

A SEASONABLE HOUSEHOLD HELP

After your housecleaning is finished just look at your leather upholstered furniture, cushions and table covers of leather. This treatment will remove that shoddy look and that greasy appearance: Boil one-half pint linseed oil and allow to stand until nearly cold. Then add half pint vinegar, stir till well mixed and bottle. To apply, pour a few drops on soft duster, rub the surface to be renovated and afterward polish with soft cloth.

YOUR GARDEN

If you have some very small, fine plants that can't stand sprinkling, just take a small funnel, hold close to ground between plants and pour water through funnel.

A home-made weed puller is made by taking a flat four or five feet long, cut a V shape in one end of it. Just put the V against weed, a little push, and it's out. Fine for large flower bed where you can't reach the weeds by hand.

THE TABLE

Fruit Rice Puddin'.—One cup rice, two cups water, one cup fruit, one cup fruit juice, half cup or more of sugar, two egg whites. Wash rice carefully. Boil with one cup water five minutes, then drain in sieve and rinse with cold water. Put rice in inside part of double boiler, mix with the fruit juice and one cup water heated until they boil. Cook this until rice is soft, then mix in sugar and stiffly beaten whites of eggs. If you have cherries or some other sour fruit you will need more sugar unless the fruit has been canned with a good deal of sugar in the first place. Let pudding become very cold, then turn it out on a plate and trim with some of the fruit that belongs to the juice. If you want an extra nice dessert, use canned pineapples and serve it with cream. Here are also a few changes for rice pudding: (1) Add two tablespoons cocoanut to rice custard and sprinkle a little cocoanut over top of white of egg before you put it into the oven to brown. (2) Use half cup grated maple sugar instead of white sugar added to the rice. Serve this with grated maple sugar and a pitcher of cream. (3) Add two tablespoons grated chocolate to rice custard and cook until it is melted. When you add chocolate, serve pudding with plain or whipped cream. (4) If you can get nice fresh hickory nuts, add two tablespoons of these, chopped very fine, to the rice custard and sprinkle a few on top of the white of egg before you brown it. These changes will be found very good.

Creamed Cabbage.—Chop fine one small cabbage, cook one hour, or until it begins to turn dark, seasoning with salt, pepper and plenty of butter. Before removing from fire sprinkle with one scant tablespoon flour; add cream to make a smooth sauce.

Emphatic Tire Points

The more air a tire contains the less it will heat up in service. Over-inflation causes injurious vibration of the whole car. Under-inflation hastens breakdown, but gives easy riding. Heavy cars wear the treads down rapidly, light cars the sides. Drive wheels wear the tires one-fifth faster than front tires. There is no certain mileage in any tire. It's the driver's care that counts.

SIZE DOES NOT ALWAYS COUNT

There Have Been Many Men of Small Stature Who Have Made Good.

"You can't tell by the look of a frog how far he can jump."

That old and crude philosophy is as applicable to men as to frogs.

A story in the Star recently told of the arrival at the Union Station of four men, three of them alert, well dressed, impressive looking. The fourth wore a battered old gabardine, frayed at the buttonholes. His manner was timid and retiring. In size he was insignificant.

He was a little great man, Dr. Chas. H. Mayo, one of the greatest surgeons the world has ever known.

John B. Gough, the great platform orator, used to tell a story about himself, how he arrived late at a hall in Glasgow, where he was to speak. The place was packed. He could not get in.

To the crowd wedged into the front entrance he told that he must get in, he was Gough, the speaker. They looked at him, he was an undersized man, and laughed. They imagined that Gough, the great orator, must be a tall man.

He went to a side window, hoping to be able to crowd in there. It was already jammed full, and they, too, laughed when he told them he was John B. Gough.

Finally he went to a rear door and told the man on guard there that he was Gough.

"Yes, five or six other men have already told me that," the watchman said. Gough gave him a shilling to pass him in to the stage and after the lecture the doorkeeper went to him and said:

"Well, Gough, you're like a singed cat; better than you look."

Many men who do great things are small in stature and insignificant looking. Nearly all of them would pass unnoticed in a crowd.

Gen. Sir John French, Field Marshal in command of the British forces in France, "the incomparable Ney" of the British Army, is described by Herbert Corey as "short and squat in stature, a ludicrous figure on horseback, and not at all the sort of man in appearance one expects a cavalry leader to be."

And he is "quiet and unassuming." They are all—the men who do great things.

Lloyd-George, British Chancellor of the Exchequer, one of the great men of England, is described as follows in Collier's Weekly:

"A short, stocky man, about the size of LaFollette, there was nothing distinguished in his appearance." He is known as "the little Welsh lawyer."

Lord Roberts, a great general, was known as "Little Bobs."

Grant was short and stocky. Lord Nelson "the greatest sea fighter the world has ever seen," was undersized and delicate. Napoleon was "the Little Corporal."

Stephen A. Douglas was "the Little Giant." Harriman and Jay Gould, wizards of railway finance, were undersized. So is John D. Rockefeller.

The list might be extended to columns, disproving the popular belief that for a man to be a genius he must be big; but still the world will keep on believing it.—Kansas City Star.

When a girl's vocal efforts sound like a second-hand buzz saw working overtime she calls it technic, but what the neighbors call it wouldn't look well in print.

Many a man has let a good job get away from him because he harbored the delusion that no other man was smart enough to fill his place.

TEXAS COMMUNITY IS

ASTIR WITH WONDER.

Avery, Texas. — In the Rehebeth community they have a "seven days wonder;" possibly one that will last longer. Four young ladies, members of the best families of that community, while on their way to school encountered what they believe to have been an apparition—that of a woman carrying a small dog. The "ghost" or whatever it was, pointed a finger at the girls and in a doleful voice commanded:

"Decorate my grave!"

Only two of the quartet of girls understood what the apparition said, but all were for a moment held fast in their tracks. One young lady was bold enough to speak to the "spooky" thing, and her request was that they be allowed to pass. Whereupon the apparition spoke again, saying:

"Decorate my grave ere you pass this way!"

It was then the girls turned and ran, and hurried to school by cutting across the fields.

At the school the girls related their startling experience and the excited teacher and mystified pupils returned with them to the place where the vision had been seen and heard. The teacher and pupils being unable to see or hear anything unnatural accused the four girls of playing a hoax, but the girls would not be doubted, so they placed a marker on the spot where the spook had stood.

Later men came with implements and dug into the place marked, finding mixed sand and clay, as in a filled grave. During the digging two of the girls declared they seemed to hear a murmuring sound coming from the grave, as if the occupant was saying "O joy," or "O thanks," but all of them still insisted that the same ghostly figure stood a few yards away on a slight elevation of the ground.

When the grave was refilled with the sand and clay one of the girls laid a bunch of fresh spring hyacinths on the mounded soil and the apparition instantly disappeared, the girls say.

No one of the community knows of a body having been buried there, but the incident of the school girls' vision is related by citizens worthy of credence and not given to joking.

FOR ONE CHEEK'S BLOOM, $4,000.

South Carolina Girl Reimbursed for Its Loss in Car Accident.

Columbus, S. C.—There is a young woman here who regards her rosy cheeks as very valuable. This really would be true, in a monetary sense, could all the epidermis of her face be charged for at the rate the Columbia Railway, Gas and Electric Co. was forced to pay for about three square inches of that complexion, which was removed when she was thrown from a moving street car.

The supreme court agreed that this cuticle was not worth all of $10,000, for which amount suit was entered by Miss Clyde Yarborough. The high court did hold, however, that she was due $4,000 for the loss, the rosier part of one cheek.

Nothing disgusts a fault-finder like bumping into perfection.

A dime in the hand is better than a dollar mark on paper.

Some women are nervous and some are naturally nervy.

Glimpses of Married Life

BY MRS. EVA LEONARD

"Really, Mrs. Morton, I told the doctor I was coming over with him tonight to see if your family looked like such a nest of invalids as the number of doctor's calls would indicate. Do you arrange to take turns being sick?"

Mrs. Ellison had not been in the house since the baby came; she had publicly cut Nell at two gatherings, and had left her off her list of guests when she gave her luncheon, so Nell was surprised to see her at the door.

She colored and tried to laugh off the speech. "I told Dick before his accident that three such families as ours would make a living for a doctor, but I think the baby is getting better. Mother seems to know just what to do for him; it's more a matter of nursing than medicine."

"I understood she was here; how you must enjoy her." The emphasis on "enjoy" was unmistakable. "I do not know what we should have done without her," said Nell gratefully. "I'll call her," and she rose.

"Do not disturb her; the doctor will not be long I think," demurred the lady, but Nell apparently did not hear.

"Oh, mother," she whispered, "come in and help me. That Mrs. Ellison is here. I positively am afraid to be alone with her. I feel as helpless as a lamb alone with a wolf."

"Humph!" snorted Mrs. Morton, hanging up her kitchen apron and starting for the living room.

"Good evening, Mrs. Ellison," she said, eyeing her with grim satisfaction. "We haven't met since that afternoon when you took it upon yourself to try to regulate my son's life and show me my duty as a mother."

Mrs. Ellison bowed coldly. "I understand you have had your hands full since then with other people's affairs," continued the imperious old lady.

"A varied interest keeps one young, you know," Mrs. Ellison tossed her head defiantly. "You will never grow old, then, that must be a great comfort." Mrs. Morton eyed her keenly. "I suppose you know that Miss Rudolph brought Nell the news of Dick's accident and stayed to take care of the baby while Nell assisted the doctor. I thought I'd tell you that she did not see Dick. It's best to have the fountain of information properly informed."

It was evident to Nell that the old lady was enjoying the grilling she was giving the caller, and Mrs. Ellison seemed utterly at a loss. She did not know what to say to this fearless enemy.

"The Scotts were here to call today," said Nell, thinking to divert the conversation into pleasant channels. "I learned of your neighborly misrepresentations to Mrs. Scott," continued Mrs. Morton. "I suppose you thought where you were not known your stories were more apt to be believed, but an antidote was administered and the poison proved harmless."

"Really, you speak in enigmas; I fail to understand you," said Mrs. Ellison.

"I think you can puzzle it out if you put your mind to it." The old eyes were looking at her over her glasses. "You ask Mrs. Scott to explain if you do not understand; she'll do it gladly."

Here the doctor came from the bedroom, and Mrs. Ellison rose, and with a black look at Mrs. Morton and a frosty good-night to Nell, took her leave.
